The E-Z Opener bag factory is working three shifts and 24-hours a day with an increase of over 25 in the number of hands employed. This is one of the several industries in Fulton to grow and prosper and in which the residents take pride. The locating of this firm here was the direct result of effort on the part of the Chamber of Commerce and it has been a paying proposition from the start. Additional machinery will be installed and it is anticipated that within another twelve months even greater strides will be made by the company.

Mr. E. J. Penfield, president of the Chamber of Commerce, is the enthusiastic and ambitious manager of the bag factory and it is due to his energy as well as to the quality of the goods manufactured, that such a large measure of success has come to the industry.

FARMER'S INSTITUTE

Season for 1910-11—Places and Dates of the institutes in Oswego County.

The last week in November marks the opening in this state of the Farmers' Institute season for 1910-1911. The force of workers assigned to each of the four districts into which the state is divided for this purpose will at that time begin, in the interest of better and more remunerative agriculture, a series of meetings lasting well into March, and at which will be presented the principles underlying correct farm practice and instruction in the more progressive methods for accomplishing desired results.

The men sent out by the Department of Agriculture for this work are many of them experts in some particular branch of farming, and each speaks from a wide and experimental knowledge of his subject and from an enthusiastic belief in the future of New York State Agriculture—that larger yields, better products and a corresponding increase in prices will be the certain result of education in agriculture.

Below is given a list of the places and dates of the institutes which each conductor will hold in Oswego County: Phoenix, December 5, W. H. Carrier, Phoenix; Fulton, December 6, Wm. H. Pollard, Fulton; Palermo, December 7, Martin Dolbear, R. D. 4, Fulton; Central Square, December 7, Chas. B. Allen, Central Square; Parish, December 8, W. C. Richards, Parish; Palaski, December 8-9, F. E. Alexander, R. D. Palaski; Williamstown, December 9, Elmer F. Harris, Williamstown; Sandy Creek, December 9-10, A. R. Stevens, Lacoma; Mexico, December 12, W. A. Robbins, Mexico; South West Oswego, December 13, F. E. Rounds, R. D. Oswego; Hannibal, December 13, Mrs. R. F. Hopper, Hannibal.

Shake off the grip of your old enemy, Nasal Catarrh, by using Ely's Cream Balm. Then will all the swelling and soreness be driven out of the tender, inflamed membranes. The fits of sneezing will cease and the discharge, as offensive to others as to yourself, will be stopped when the causes that produce it are removed. Cleanliness, comfort and renewed health by the use of Cream Balm. Sold by all druggists for 50 cents, or mailed by Ely Bros., 56 Warren Street, New York.

TROLLEY MUST REDUCE FARE

Albany, Nov. 2.—The Public Service Commission, Second district, has ordered the Syracuse, Lakeshore & Northern Railroad company to reduce its fare from Stop 26 to Fulton, Oswego County, from 10 to 5 cents. The fare had been 5 cents up to June, 1909, when it was raised to 10 cents. The order was made on a complaint presented by O. L. Odell and others residing at Stop 26 who alleged the charge to be unjust and unreasonable.

Rheumatic Pains

"My mother is a great sufferer from rheumatism, and Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills is the only remedy that relieves her."

MRS. G. DAVENPORT, Roycefield, N. J.

The pains of rheumatism are almost invariably relieved with Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. They also overcome that nervous irritation which prevents sleep because they soothe the nerves. To chronic sufferers they are invaluable. When taken as directed, they relieve the distress and save the weakening influence of pain, which so frequently prostrates. Many sufferers use them whenever occasion requires with the greatest satisfaction, why not you? They do not derange the stomach nor create a habit. Why not try them? Get a package from your druggist. Take it according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

PULASKI PROGRESSIVE

Houses Being Numbered and Free Mail Delivery Expected

Pulaski, Nov. 3.—The numbering of the houses in this village, which is being done under the direction of D. M. Armstrong of Providence, R. I., is progressing nicely. Mr. Armstrong said to-day. It is quite probable that Pulaski will at no distant day have a city free mail delivery. Postmaster James L. Moore, stated that there was every indication at present to warrant the belief that by June next the business at the Pulaski postoffice, which is now in the list of 3rd class offices would reach the prescribed amount to change its class and thereby entitle this village to a free city delivery. There are at present four rural routes running from the local postoffice. It was further stated by Postmaster Moore that it would be necessary to have every house in the village properly numbered in order to secure a free delivery of mail, and occupants of houses which were not numbered would have to secure their mail at the office.

With the completion of the house numbering it is probable that a village directory will be published.

Sardine Fishing.

In sardine fishing there are many uncertainties. There is a twenty-eight foot rise and fall of tide in the bay of Pundy, and especially constructed wooden picket inclosures are staked out in the water to gather in the fish. Last season a man erected an inclosure in what he supposed to be excellent fishing territory, but got nothing. He deplored his loss and for a time failed to go near it. "Why don't you seine it again?" somebody asked. "What's the use?" he replied. "Let me try it," the other persisted. "Yes," and you may have all the fish you get." The other man pulled out $1.00 worth at one haul.—Frank Leslie's.

Teakwood.

The world's supply of teak comes from Siam, Burma, India and Java. Teakwood is not attacked by the white ant, which is so destructive to other woods in the tropics, and teak is thus largely used in Siam for the building of the better class of wooden houses.

The Shark is a Slow Swimmer.

One ill service nature has done the shark—namely, that of placing a triangular fin on his back which acts as a danger signal and gives warning of his approach. Happily the shark has not been gifted with sufficient sagacity to be aware of this peculiarity, for had he been so he would unquestionably abandon his habit of swimming close to the surface of the water and would in that case be enabled to approach his victim unobserved. The shark is a slow swimmer for his size and strength. Byron observes, "As darts the dolphin from the shark." But Byron was a poet and does not appear to have been a close observer of the habits of inhabitants of the water or he would have known that a shark would have no more chance of catching a dolphin than a sheep would of overhauling a hare.

It was decided not to conduct a foreign lecture course for the benefit of the library, the last one not having been a financial success. It was voted to invite Hon. N. N. Stranahan, who will return on November 19 from a six months European sojourn, to talk of his travels in the Assembly room at the library at some date convenient for him. Tickets will be sold at 25c each and the proceeds devoted to the library indebtedness.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS

New System Will Be Tested in Forty-eight Cities—$100,000 Appropriated for First Year's Expenses.

The new system of postal savings banks will be tested at first in forty-eight cities, one in each State and Territory. These cities, as follows, were designated on the 23d by the board of trustees, which is composed of Postmaster General Hitchcock, Secretary MacVeagh and Attorney General Wickersham:

Beasemer, Ala.; Globe, Ariz.; Stuttgart, Ark.; Oroville, Cal.; Leadville, Col.; Ansonia, Conn.; Dover, Del.; Key West, Fla.; Brunswick, Ga.; Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; Pekin, Ill.; Princeton, Ind.; Decorah, Ia.; Pittsburg, Kan.; Middlesboro, Ky.; New Iberia, La.; Rumford, Me.; Frostburg, Md.; Norwood, Miss.; Houghton, Mich.; Bemidji, Minn.; Gulfport, Miss.; Carthage, Mo.; Anacostia, Mont.; Nebraska City, Neb.; Carson City, Nev.; Berlin, N. H.; Rutherford, N. J.; Raton, N. M.; Cohoes, N. Y.; Salisbury, N. C.; Wapakoneta, N. D.; Ashtabula, Ohio; Geymon, Okla.; Klamath Falls, Ore.; Dubois, Pa.; Bristol, R. I.; Newberry, S. C.; Deadwood, S. D.; Johnson City, Tenn.; Port Arthur, Tex.; Provo, Utah; Montpelier, Vt.; Clifton Forge, Va.; Olympia, Wash.; Grafton, W. Va.; Mantowoc, Wis.; Laramie, Wyo.

As the appropriation for the first year is only $100,000, which must cover the expenses of equipment, including the engraving and printing of forms, certificates and bonds, as well as the cost of clerical assistance, it is not practicable at present to establish the banks in the post offices of the large cities. Communities were selected in which the conditions exceptionally favored the development of a postal savings business, a majority of the cities being industrial centers, while some of them are not adequately provided with other savings institutions. The system will be tested in the forty-eight offices for at least one month before other cities are added to the list, but it is expected that the number will be largely increased before the end of the current fiscal year.

The postal banks will be conducted on strictly banking lines, with the exception that there will be no pass books, certificates of deposit being issued in duplicate.

The opening of an account will be a very simple proceeding. Any person 10 years of age or over may open an account in his or her name for $1. The same privilege applies to a married woman whose account shall be free from any control or interference by her husband.

"Like the dime savings bank, however, you may begin your account with Uncle Sam by buying a 10-cent postal savings card. When you have purchased nine other postal savings stamps which the Postmaster has attached to your postal savings card, you will receive in exchange a certificate of deposit. The postal savings stamps are then destroyed by the Postmaster. The Postmaster General has already ordered 1,500,000 postal savings cards and 10,000,000 postal savings stamps with which to begin business.

No one may deposit more than $100 in any calendar month, while the total balance is limited to $500. Furthermore, no person shall at the same time have more than one postal savings account in his or her own right.

No obstacles are placed in the way of any depositor from withdrawing the whole or any part of his or her account, with accrued interest on demand, under such regulations, as the Board of Trustees may prescribe.

Depositors will be paid 2 per cent. interest yearly. The postal funds placed in designated banks by the Board of Trustees will yield the government 2 1/4 per cent. It is believed that this quarter of 1 per cent. difference between what the government pays the depositor—and what the banks will pay Uncle Sam will be sufficient to meet all necessary expenses for conducting the postal savings depositories.

A careful study of the law creating postal savings banks makes it clear that the government will be benefited largely and that within a year or two after the system has been in operation Uncle Sam may have all the money necessary to meet deficiencies, and to make effective public improvements without having to appeal to Wall street for financial aid.

Section 10 of the act gives a depositor the privilege of surrendering his deposit or any part thereof in sums of $20, $40, $60, $80 and $100, and multiples of $100 and $500, and receive in lieu of such deposits United States coupons or registered bonds of the denominations of these amounts, which shall bear interest at the rate of 2 1/2 per cent per annum, and be redeemable one year from date of issue and payable twenty years from such date. These bonds are payable in gold coin.

It is believed by the Board of Trustees that this section of the law will prove a strong inducement to the people, and especially the foreign element, to patronize the postal banks. It will also add to the desire of children to put away their pennies that they may buy a government bond.

In connection with the section of the law limiting deposits to $500, it should be understood that deposits are at no time to exceed that amount, but when a depositor has accumulated five hundred dollars he or she may invest the account in the bonds issued by the government and then again build up their postal savings to the limit when more bonds may be purchased.

One of the probable first effects to follow the opening of the postal savings banks, says Postoffice Department officials, will be the falling off in the purchase of international and local money orders by our alien population.

It is believed this class of citizens will be among the first to avail themselves of the postal savings depositories, and that they will discontinue the practice of sending their savings to their old homes in Europe for deposit in the foreign postal savings banks. The decline in the sale of foreign and local money orders may show in postal receipts, but it is believed the general good resulting to the country will more than offset the loss from this source.

Treasury officials declare that one of the strong features of the postal savings bank law is the authority given the board of trustees to use the postal savings for investment in United States bonds. As the postal funds grow they can be exchanged for bonds which become subject to the call of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The success that has attended the creation of postal savings banks in foreign countries convinces the board of trustees that like success will immediately follow the opening of the banks in the United States.

THOSE POSTMASTERS

Department at Washington. Repeats Denial That Investigation Was Ordered There.

Washington, Nov. 4.—Officials of the Post Office Department were today again emphatic in their denials of any knowledge of complaints being received of political activity by postmasters in Oneida county. When shown dispatches from Utica, to the effect that Post Office Inspector Reddy had interviewed the postmasters involved, it was stated that he was ordered from here. It was explained that perhaps the complaints had been made to the chief inspector of the New York division, from whence the orders of investigation issued.

"No complaint against the Oneida county postmasters for political activity has reached the Department," one prominent official said. "No investigation has been ordered from here, and none is on as far as the Department is concerned. There is absolutely nothing to the matter."

These views were substantially repeated by a number of other officials approached. The report that President Taft had instigated the inquiry could not be verified. Inquirers at the White House were informed that nothing was known of the matter further than what appeared in the newspapers.

On that date the churches are asked to urge by prayer, song and sermon "the abolition of war, and the substitution of imperative, universal arbitration."

Oswego Times, Nov. 3, 1886: N. W. Nutting carried Oswego county for Congress by 4,814 majority. Thomas Moore was elected county treasurer by 3,223 majority; L. W. Baker, special surrogate by 3,218; Howe elected member of assembly, first district, by 223 plurality; D. E. Ainsworth, member of assembly, second district, by 1,409 majority; Charles N. Bolger defeated John J. White by 115 majority. The vote was White, 2,216; Bolger, 2,243. Fred Wells, watchmaker and engraver, will be pleased to see all his friends at G. B. # DIX ELECTED GOVERNOR Carries the State by 55,000 Majority.

STATE SENATE CLOSE

J. SLOAT FASSETT DEFEATED

Joint Ballot.

New York, Nov. 9.—The Democratic party in the country at large has won its first victory since the election of Grover Cleveland to the presidency in 1892. It has elected governors in New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Ohio; it has upset the Republican majority in the house of representatives, has insured a greatly reduced majority in the United States senate, has defeated Bryanism in Nebraska and Rooseveltism in the East.

In Colonel Roosevelt's home state the Democratic candidate for governor, John A. Dix, is elected by a plurality of approximately 51,739 after a bitter fight for the domination of Colonel Roosevelt and the new nationalism were the principal issues.

Bass is elected governor in New Hampshire. Cooper, Republican and Fusion candidate for governor, defeats Taylor, Democratic candidate, in Tennessee.

Colonel Roosevelt was defeated in his own election district by 60; in his home county of Nassau by 309 and probably in his own congressional district. Martin W. Littleton, Democratic candidate for congress, has a plurality in the colonel's county over Congressman Corks, who is the spokesman of Colonel Roosevelt, when the colonel was president. Returns at this hour indicate Mr. Littleton's election by just about the plurality he received in Mr. Roosevelt's county.

Mr. Fassett's warmest personal and political friend, John W. Dwight, the Republican whip of the house, is re-elected.

Wilson Elected in New Jersey. The Democrats carried New Jersey, electing Woodrow Wilson, former president of Princeton university, by a handsome plurality.

In Nebraska where, as in Indiana, election of a United States senator is practically by popular vote, Hitchcock, anti-Bryan Democrat, is elected over United States Senator Burkett (Rep.) by 20,000. Mayor Dahlman of Omaha, who led the Democratic revolt against Bryan in Nebraska, carried the city of Omaha in his campaign for governor by 9,000. But Aldrich, the Republican, is leading in the interior of the state, and the indications are that his pluralities in the counties will more than offset the plurality of Mayor Dahlman in Douglas county, which includes the city of Omaha.

The only solace which the Republicans derive from the New York election is their apparent control of the state senate. They have sustained a heavy loss in congressmen as well as in state senators.

The present congressmen most overwhelmingly defeated in that state is Herbert Parsons, son of John B. Parsons of the sugar trust.

Henry George, son of the theorist and single tax advocate, apparently has a small majority over William S. Bennett.

In New York the surprising feature of the election was that the Republican vote fell off more heavily upstate than it did in greater New York. In Greater New York the Democratic plurality was considerably exceeded in the year when Bird S. Coler ran against former Governor Odell. The upstate Republicans have seldom, if ever, come down with such a small majority, it being estimated that Stimson, Republican candidate for governor, has not more than 45,000 plurality in the upstate counties.

In Kentucky Caleb Powers, thrice convicted for the assassination of Goebel, and not long out of prison, was elected to congress by 3,000, carrying every county in his district, except his home county of Laurel.

Incomplete returns from Kansas indicate the defeat of Governor Stubbs.

Uphle Joe Cannon, speaker of the house, is elected by the largest majority the district has given him for 10 years. Serebo E. Payne, chairman of the ways and means committee, is elected by a plurality but little short of normal. John Dalzell, another of Speaker Cannon's lieutenants is re-elected in Pennsylvania.

J. Sloat Fassett Defeated. Speaker Cannon, but one of the old guard upholders of Roosevelt at Saratoga, is defeated.

The situation in congress something of a guess. The present returns indicate the following.

The Republicans lose senators from Indiana, Maine, where the election had already been held; Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, New York and Ohio. This result means the Republican majority in the United States senate will be reduced from 25 to 12.

The house of representatives will be Democratic, probably by 29, a Democratic gain of 35. In the new house will be two Socialists from Wisconsin.

The New York legislature will be Democratic on a joint ballot by about five, thus insuring a Democratic successor to the Hon. Chauncey M. Depew.

The New York legislature features subject to correction are: Democrats, 27; Republicans, 24. Assembly: Democrats, 76; Republicans, 74.

Democratic majority on joint ballot, five.

UPHEAVAL IN ONEIDA COUNTY

Davenport and Millington Defeated in That Republican Stronghold.

Utica, Nov. 9.—The greatest political upheaval in 30 years in Oneida county was witnessed here, the Democratic party being swept into office by an almost unprecedented vote.

Senator Frederick Davenport, seeking re-election on the Republican ticket, was defeated by T. Harvey Ferriss (Dem.) by a majority exceeding 500; also Representative Charles Millington, candidate for re-election to congress in the Oneida-Herkimer district, went down to defeat before Charles A. Talcott (Dem.), who comes out of the fray with fully 1,500 votes to the good.

Talcott is the first Democratic congressman elected in the 27th district in more than 20 years. The last to represent Oneida and Herkimer counties in the house was the late Henry W. Bentley of Boonville, who defeated James S. Sherman and who, after serving one term, was in turn beaten by Sherman. Thereafter Mr. Sherman represented the district continuously until he became vice president.

The big feature of the election in Oneida county, however, outside of the defeat of Senator Davenport and Representative Millington was the tremendous vote polled up for Mr. Dix. According to authentic returns it would appear that Dix overcame the normal Republican majority of 3,000 and will carry the county by a small majority, possibly 300. This was beyond the wildest dreams of the Democratic organization.

For lieutenant governor it is expected when the final returns are tabulated they will show Schoenbeck and Conway broke about even in Oneida county.

When a press representative called on Vice President Sherman for an expression on the result of the election Mr. Sherman said with emphasis: "I have absolutely nothing to say."

The upheaval in Oneida county is considered by Republican leaders as due entirely to the activity of Colonel Roosevelt in the campaign.

Eric County Gives Dix 3,500 Plurality. Buffalo, Nov. 9.—Eric county gives 3,500 plurality for Dix and 2,000 plurality for Conway and elects Driscoll and Alexander to congress. Loomis Ramsperger and Burd to the state senate; Dawson, Neupert, Jackson, Hearn, Mohozynski, Wende, McGregor and Thorne to the assembly.

Charles A. Pooley has been elected supreme court judge in the 8th judicial district over Clark H. Timmerman, the regular Republican candidate, by a plurality of about 1,000.

D. S. Alexander, the Republican candidate, has been defeated for congress by Charles B. Smith.

STATE SENATE IS CLOSE

Democrats Have Apparently Elected 24 Senators.

New York, Nov. 9.—The state senate is very close. It appears that the Democrats have elected 24 senators. Two or three other districts are in doubt. Senator Davenport in Vice President Sherman's district has been defeated.

So have the two Republican senators in Erie county—Davis and Hill, who were principally responsible for the large capal.

In Judge Parker's old district, the so-called Ulster district, Fiero (Dem.) is elected over Corliss, the present Republican incumbent.

Altogether, according to present returns, the Democrats have gained senators in these districts: Brooklyn, 2; Erie, 2; Ulster, 1; Dutchess, 1; Niagara, 1. Democrats have been elected to succeed Senators Kissel and Alton of Brooklyn.

The New York county count of senators is slow, but is probable that 2 of the 3 Republicans have been defeated.

MILITIA WAS ORDERED OUT

Trouble Caused in Oklahoma by Enforcement of "Grandfather Clause."

Oklahoma City, Nov. 9.—When armed negroes ousted the election of officers at Fussy Creek, Okla., in Waggoner county, and took charge of the election and threats of similar action were made at Guthrie, Governor C. N. Haskell ordered out several companies of militia. The troops were under arms throughout the day. A posse with Sheriff Oprey of Muskogee answered the call for help and took charge without bloodshed.

The trouble arose over enforcement of the "grandfather clause." The presence of armed men at Guthrie stopped further demonstration there. It is estimated that 75 per cent of registered negro voters of the state voted.

Anti-Prohibitionists Win in Florida.

Jacksonville, Fla., Nov. 9.—Interest in the election in Florida centered on the statewide prohibition contest. A constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture and sale of all liquors in the state was voted upon. Both sides claim victory and as many precincts are miles from telegraph or telephone, the result will not be definitely known for two days at least and even then the official canvass will be required to settle it. The indications are that the anti-Prohibitionists have carried the election by about 2,000 majority but this is by no means certain.

The Republicans had no ticket in the field for congress or for state offices.

Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi.

New Orleans, La., Nov. 9.—Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi elected Democratic tickets by usual majorities. Louisiana and Mississippi elected congressmen and minor state officials. Texas named entire state ticket with bigger Democratic majorities than Campbell got two years ago.

Louisiana ratified ten million bond issue part payment world's Panama exposition.

Republicans Carry North Dakota.

Fargo, N. D., Nov. 9.—The state has elected a Republican legislature, which insures the re-election of McComber to the United States senate and the election of Congressman G. Ronna to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Johnson. Both Republican candidates for congress have won.

Small Vote in Texas.

Austitt, Tex., Nov. 9.—It is estimated that the total vote in Texas was less than 300,000, which is short of the qualified voting strength. Of this number O. B. Colquhoun (Dem.) has received approximately 225,000 and J. O. Terrell (Rep.) 75,000 votes. No important state issues were involved in the contest.

Dix Makes a Statement.

Thomson, Nov. 9.—John A. Dix said: "The crisis has been met by the sober common sense of good citizenship. The door has been opened for reform retrenchment and honest administration. As governor I shall adhere to the strict performance of the pledges of the party platform."

Republicans Sweep Wisconsin.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 9.—At Republican state headquarters a sweeping Republican victory is claimed. F. E. McGovern, Republican candidate for governor, has an estimated plurality of 50,000 and LaFollette an even greater plurality for United States senator.

Stimson Carries Albany County.

Albany, Nov. 9.—Albany county gives Stimson for governor 1,500 plurality and elects Harold J. Minneman, William E. Nolan and Robert B. Waters to assembly. The district elects Henry M. Sage, state senator and Henry S. De Forest, congressman.

GOV. HARMON RE-ELECTED

LONGWORTH IS RE-ELECTED

Ohio Republicans Go Down to Defeat After a Most Strenuous Campaign.

President Taft's County Gives Harmon 15,000 Majority, While Cuyahoga Places 10,000 to Democrat's Credit—Harmon a Strong Democratic Possibility for President in 1912.

Cleveland, Nov. 9.—Governor Harmon has been re-elected governor of Ohio by about 40,000 majority.

One of the most bitter campaigns in the history of the Buckeye state closed last night. The Republicans put forth their most strenuous efforts to land their ticket on top, for the reason that a victory meant an endorsement of President Taft's administration and a defeat a slap at his policies which would be felt in this state far more than any other part of the country. But victory perched on the banner of the Democrats and Governor Harmon is one of the strongest possibilities in the Democratic ranks at the present time for the nomination for president in 1912.

Hamilton county, the home county of President Taft, gave Harmon 15,000 majority, and Cuyahoga county, not to be outdone, handed the chief executive 10,000 majority.

Election reports had not been received but a short time before it could be discerned that in the strongest Republican counties the Democrats were making abnormal gains and when Hamilton county reported 15,000 more votes for Harmon than Harding received the Republican leaders gave up all hope and became reconciled to defeat.

Governor Harmon received numerous telegrams of congratulation, the majority of them hailing him as the next president of the United States.

The Republicans lay their defeat to factional strife, while the Democrats claim victory because of the tariff and the governor's popularity with the masses of the people.

The Harmon landslide in Cuyahoga will probably defeat Congressman Cassidy and Howland.

Nick Longworth, Roosevelt's son-in-law, has been returned to congress.

DRAPER CONCEDES DEFEAT

Congressman Foss Elected Governor of Massachusetts by 50,000 Plurality.

Boston, Nov. 9.—Governor Draper, in conceding his defeat by Congressman Foss, said: "It looks as if they had made me the target. I trust that they have confined it to the head of the ticket."

Governor-elect Foss said: "From the latest reports thus far received I think my plurality will reach 50,000. I believe Cassidy (Dem.) has been elected lieutenant governor and that we have carried seven congress districts in the state."

Lease Elected in South Carolina.

Charleston, S. C., Nov. 9.—Slight interest was manifested in the election in the state of South Carolina, the vote from reports received being about as usual. South Carolina always polls a light vote in general elections, as all Democratic nominations in primaries are equivalent to election. The state ticket led by Colonel E. B. Lease was practically unopposed. Socialists having put out a gubernatorial candidate who received a few scattering votes.

Both Claim Victory in Nebraska.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 9.—Fine weather and a heavy vote. The liquor issue as represented by the county option fight caused thousands to scratch the ballot. A heavy vote in the Western half of the state makes it look good for Aldrich (Rep.) for governor. Republicans claim his election by a large majority.

The Democrats are equally sanguine as to Danham. The indications are that Burkhett (Rep.) has been beaten by Hitchcock (Dem.) for the United States senate.

South Carolina Solidly Democratic.

Columbia, S. C., Nov. 9.—South Carolina as usual went solidly Democratic, electing the full Democratic congressional ticket and the entire Democratic state ticket. Both tickets were named in the primary of two months ago.

Colonel L. B. Lease of Newberry is elected governor. The only opposition was that of a Socialist candidate who received merely a nominal vote.

Democrats Gain Two Congressmen.

Baltimore, Nov. 9.—Maryland's delegation in Congress will probably stand at five Democrats and one Republican, a Democratic gain of two congressmen.

O'Neal Elected in Alabama.

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 9.—Prohibition played a part in the election in Alabama and many people remained away from the polls, rather than vote against the Democratic candidate, Emmett O'Neal (Dem.) is elected governor of Alabama over J. O. Thompson (Rep.) by 20,000 to 20,000 at least. Eight of the nine Democratic congressmen are elected beyond doubt.

Republicans Gain in Michigan.

Detroit, Nov. 9.—The state ticket shows a Republican gain. Charles E. S. Osborn is elected governor by 60,000 nearly 50,000 more than Warner had had two years ago. All Republican candidates for congress are elected, with the possible exception of Dieckma in the Fifth and Denby in the First.

Georgia Returns 11 Democrats.

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 9.—Early returns indicate that Georgia returned 13 Democrats to congress yesterday. In eight districts the Democratic candidates were unopposed.

Only congressmen were elected yesterday. Governor, statehouse officers and legislature having been chosen in October.

Republicans Sweep Rhode Island.

Providence, Nov. 9.—The reelection of Republican congressmen, Republican governor and state ticket and Republican mayor of Providence is indicated by returns from 355 districts. These districts comprise the small country towns which are always strongly Republican.

Stimson Congratulates Dix.

New York, Nov. 9.—Henry L. Stimson has sent the following telegram to John A. Dix: "The present returns indicate your election. I congratulate you and send you my good wishes for the success of your administration."

Garry Herrmann Loses His District.

Cincinnati, Nov. 9.—Judson Harmon Democratic candidate for governor, carried precinct A of the Tenth ward by 24. This is the home of Garry Herrmann, Boss Cox's most noted lieutenant.

Longworth Returns to Congress.

Democrats Carry Asbury Park.

TENER IS ELECTED BY 60,000 PLURALITY

Representative Dalzell's Return to Congress Assured.

Pittsburg, Nov. 9.—Pennsylvania, the bulwark for years of Republicanism, held her own and elected a Republican governor, returned a legislature overwhelmingly Republican and will also send to congress a great majority of Republicans.

It is estimated that the plurality of John E. Tener, Republican candidate for governor, will reach 60,000, a substantial one over Berry (Keystone), an increase over the majority of Governor Stuart, the present incumbent. Grim, the Democratic candidate, is hopelessly lost.

The reelection of Hon. John Dalzell (Rep.) to congress from the 30th district is assured. This was one of the most important fights in the state next to that of governor. Even Vice President Sherman of the United States came into the Pittsburg district to speak for Dalzell.

POSTPONED UNTIL THURSDAY

Teamsters Will Then Decide on Question of General Strike.

New York, Nov. 9.—In the hope that in spite of the attitude of the express companies, as voiced in the statements which have been issued in their behalf, that they would not commit themselves to a pledge that they would not discriminate against union employees, there would not be a conference between the representatives of the companies and the strikers, the meeting of the New York joint executive council of the teamsters which was to take place today to decide on the question of a general strike was postponed until tomorrow.

The companies have made no signs that they are willing to confer with the strikers, but the strike leaders said that they had reason to believe that peace was nearer than when the week began.

Meaning the strike of the chauffeurs extended to the employees of the Mason-Seaman company, the Yellow Taxicab company, the Karyon Taxicab and garage company, the Universal Taxicab company and the New York Transportation company. This practically tied up the public automobile service throughout the city.

W. H. Ashton, general organizer of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, said that he had hopes that there would be a settlement after all and that the companies would meet a committee representing the strikers. For that reason, the meeting to call a general strike was put back another day.

The delegates of the other organizations of drivers in the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Ashton said, had hard work to keep the members from striking.

SCHOOL PRIZES WORTH $5,250

Final Plans of Big Contests Inaugurated by Tuberculosis Crusaders Announced—To Aid Sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals.

New York, Nov. 16.—Announcement of prizes worth $5,250, to be awarded to the city or village selling before midnight of January 1, 1911, the largest number of Red Cross Christmas Seals, per capita of school registration, is made to day by the Tuberculosis Committee of the State Charities Aid Association in making public final plans for one of the most significant contests among the schools, ever conducted in this state.

The first prize for the contest, announcement of which was made last week, is a Richmond stationary vacuum cleaning plant, of capacity to meet the needs of the grade or High School, selected by the city or village winning the prize. The other prizes are of equal educational value. The second prize, an equipment of sanitary drinking fountains, up to the number of four, is donated by James B. Clow & Sons of New York and Chicago. The third prize is a complete equipment for one school of the Gullik Hygiene series of five text books on physiology and hygiene, donated by Ginn & Co., of New York.

The State Charities Aid Association has been appointed by the American National Red Cross, sole agent for the sale of the seals outside of Greater New York, and has arranged for this contest in an effort to secure from this sale $100,000 for local anti-tuberculosis work in New York State.

In a letter which has gone out to more than eight hundred school superintendents, principals, local committees and local sub-agents, the association says:

"This contest has two purposes: (1) to increase the sale of the seals in an effort to make good the slogan '$100,000 for tuberculosis in New York State' and (2) to increase public interest in school hygiene for order and the slogan of the anti-tuberculosis crusade in this state 'No uncleaned for tuberculosis in 1915' may be realized.

The association calls particular attention to the following facts, that the contest is among COMMUNITIES and not among the schools themselves, and that cities and villages of all sizes stand absolutely equal chances, because the prizes are to be awarded on the basis of the largest sale, per capita school registration.

VICTORS AND VANQUISHED TALK

How The Successful and The Defeated Candidates Took The Election Verdict. Their Remarks Worth Perusing.

Henry L. Stimson, the defeated candidate, gave out this statement: "I believe this election is a mere incident in our fight for progress which will go on until its ends are attained. The leadership of the Republican party is in the hands of progressives and we do not propose to be discouraged by any temporary setback. Instead, I feel confident this fight appealed to all men of all parties who are looking forward, and that eventually they will be found enrolled with us and fighting for the same ends. There is so much to be done to make our American political life clean and efficient and so many problems still to be worked out by thoughtful and patriotic men. I have no fear of the permanency of any reaction."

Governor-Elect Dix said: "The will of the people has been heard. The triumph of Democracy will tranquilize conditions and bring business peace."

Judge Reeves said: "We were beaten by force of numbers and nothing else. I am certainly gratified at the result of the vote in Watertown and in Jefferson county generally. The Watertown result is especially gratifying in view of the fact that I did no work here. I am pleased also at the result in Brownville, where I lived. The argument made during the first of my campaign that there were 7,900 against me proved a little too forcible an argument to overcome. The confidence of the people in the county, however, is well shown through the result in Watertown, Brownville and Rodman, where I was best known. This result alone repays me for all my effort. We were beaten by force of numbers and nothing else."

Fred M. Moore said: "I want to thank my friends for their support and while I am naturally disappointed such things have got to be expected in a political fight. I have assured Mr. Kandt that I will assist him in anyway possible in establishing himself in the office."

United States Senator Dewey: "I am the happiest man in the State of New York. I am seventy-seven years of age, I have been fifty-four years actively in politics, and I think I can say that my ambitions have been reasonably satisfied. During the past campaign I made sometimes two speeches a night, once talking for an hour in the rain, and the next morning my voice was in as good condition as ever. My health is good and my desire of years, to be happy myself and share that happiness with others, has been fairly well satisfied. I was fairly certain that the Republicans would be defeated, for the change in the vote that elected Foss in Massachusetts, Havens in New York, and Plaisted in Maine was so nearly the same that there was no doubt that the country was up in arms. That the Democrats would show the judgement that they did in the selection of candidates was more or less surprising, as a rule, candidates on the ticket are selected by those who control the cities, who, no matter what the political system, are not always apt to pick the best men. With a man of the high character, education, and ability of John A. Dix in New York State, Judge Baldwin, a distinguished jurist and the leader of the bar in his State in Connecticut; Woodrow Wilson and all that he stands for, in New Jersey, and Judson Harmon, a former member of Cleveland's Cabinet, in Ohio, the Democratic party is in the strongest position that it has ever held in the history of the country. Every one knows the man that the Democrats should select for the Senate. Several names were suggested, but Mr. Dewey refused to admit that he was referring to any particular individual. "It is not any particular man," he said, "but the one who can best meet the peculiar conditions that confront a Senator from New York. Hatred of this State is very intense, and when all other subjects fall the Western orator can always fall back on the inequity of the business interests that are concentrated here. Then, too, are demands are larger than other States and our necessities greater, a fact that places us at the mercy of the representatives of other States, who, very frequently, when we ask for an appropriation, reply that a single request from New York State, such as a new post office in Greater New York, calls for a larger expenditure than all the public buildings in their entire commonwealth. It is here that the personal equation enters. When I went to Washington, I took the largest house that I could find, and kept open house all the year round. It was not that I sought anything in particular, but the Senator from New York is expected to entertain; moreover, I enjoy the social side of things. And, fortunately, I could afford it. It all counted, too, in the achievements for the State. In my twelve years as Senator I obtained $35,000,000 for New York harbor—and I was able to accomplish more despite the prejudice against the State than many of the men who were filling the pages of the Congressional Record day after day after day. And the future, for myself? At seventy-seven I am blessed with health, energy, a capacity for work, and the ability to enjoy it. There was a Buffalo hotelkeeper who some years ago came to the State convention as a fighting candidate for State treasurer. When after a hard battle, he was defeated for the nomination, some one asked him what he was going to do. "I'm going back to Buffalo," he said, "and keep hotel like hell." Well, I'm chairman of the Board of Directors of the New York Central system, and, like my Buffalo friend, I'm going to be chairman like hell."

Col. Roosevelt has not as yet expressed himself regarding the election just passed.

Congressman-elect Luther W. Mott says: "While I regret the defeat of the Republican state ticket, I am, of course, delighted with the showing Oswego County made. The way the people of my home county stood by me will always be a source of gratification to me, and I shall see that they do not regret it. I also

W. C. T. U. HOME TO BE OPENED

Worthy Cause Asks Co-operation of Fulton Citizens. Non-sectarian and Broad in its Scope. Ladies Now Soliciting Contributions.

The working girls home project which was started several months ago by the local W. C. T. U., will be a reality within the near future, the necessary maintenance for the winter being forthcoming. The committee is now looking up a suitable house and as soon as one is secured the home will be established.

The city is being solicited by different committees for different streets and our residents are asked to contribute whatever they may feel inclined in the way of furniture, furnishings, money, or groceries. Everything will be acceptable that can be used in a home and no one should feel that they cannot give because they can only afford a little. The cause is so worthy as to enlist the co-operation of everyone.

Solicitors for a similar cause in Syracuse have been busy in Fulton during the past two weeks and they have met with generous response. It is to be hoped that in the future our public spirited residents will remember that there is need for their assistance at home, and that the strangers within our gates are as needy and deserving as those in nearby cities.

MOTT'S NOTABLE VICTORY

Lowville Journal
Luther W. Mott wins by about 3,200 in the district. Jefferson County gives him 174 plurality and he loses Lewis County by 30. He carries his home county, Oswego, by about 3,000. In view of the desperate fight made against him the victory is notable. We have lost Congressmen in the State in very strong Republican districts. We heartily congratulate Mr. Mott on his splendid run and especially is he to be congratulated on his great vote in his home county, where he was born and has always lived.

We have just received a magnificent line of new Chett shirts and faddy neckwear for the Thanksgiving trade. Make your selection early.

OLD TIME DEED FILED

An old-timer in the deed line was filed in the County Clerk's office last week. The paper transferred property now located at the corner of Bridge and River streets in Fulton from Norman Hubbard and Sarah Hubbard, his wife, to Daniel C. Van Time. It was dated April 5, 1828 and it looked every minute of its advanced age.

It had worn in two in the middle where it had been folded and just hung in shreds at the other points of folding. The paper had yellowed with age and the ink was badly faded. The acknowledgement was taken by Joseph Easton who signs himself as Judge of the Oswego County Courts, and one of the witnesses was Daniel Falley, one of the prominent pioneer residents in Fulton.

The deed was brought into the clerk's office by Emerson Stowell to be recorded.

Perhaps you are in need of a new hat for Thanksgiving or need an old one remodelled. The best place to go for satisfactory work and materials is,

A REMARKABLE STORY.

The following beautiful story is republished upon the request of Attorney C. H. David to whom the writer was known. He was the Rev. S. J. Decker and for several years occupied a pulpit at Gilbert's Mills; for several years after he was pastor of the Baptist church at Pulaski. The story of the pastor's vision was first published in the Pulaski Democrat of over fifty years ago. At the time of its publication it was accompanied by the following note from the editor:

[The following singular experience is related by a gentleman of this village of unquestionable intelligence and veracity. It is not a "fancy sketch," but an actual occurrence, bearing, to the reader, every mark of a reality. However it may be regarded, it will be read with much interest. Ed.]

As every feeling, sensation and development of the human soul is interesting to the reflecting, and as every phenomenon of the mind is important, opening some knowledge of man to man, I thought that, perhaps, some mental inquirers would be paid for reading what, to me, was a singular development, and which occurred in connection with a recent sickness, through which I have passed.

But, to give the reader an entire view of the phenomenon, it will be proper to give first a brief history of things which have led to it:

Thirty-one years ago, next April, I suffered an injury upon my head, which resulted (after a few months of painful and confused sensations) in insanity, from which I partially recovered, but have had sudden attacks of excessive pain and confusion in my head, from time to time, ever since, resulting in periods of partial and sometimes of total insanity.

As time wore on, these attacks became less frequent, shorter in duration, and weaker in effect, until I have had but three attacks since I came to this country, twelve years ago. But I do not remember a day in 20 years when I have been entirely free from pain and confused feeling in my head, always augmented by severe thought, close study, over-exertion or excitement, so much so that I have rarely been able to block out an ordinary lecture at one sitting, unless I could grasp the thought and finish it in from fifteen to thirty minutes.

The way I have been obliged to study and think on substantial subjects, is to think as hard and rapidly as possible, till I feel dizzy and my thread of thought breaks. I then get up, move, run to the neighbors, or the business part of the place, talk and listen to talk for an hour or two, regain my balance of mind, go home and try again.

Very often, in public speaking, when fifteen or twenty minutes of clear, strong thought has passed upon my mind, pain and confused feeling in my head take place, and I am obliged to go, broken and limping to the end of the subject. You can see, reader, from this (my common condition) how near the shore of insanity I live all the time. These attacks are sudden, and no striking mental phenomena accompany their commencement, but recovery is more slow, often displaying curious mental conditions. What I am about to relate took place between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock, on the third night after my recent attack, on the 16th of January last.

I was lying in the middle room in my house, making all the efforts to sleep I could, but in vain. Memories for years totally forgotten, were clear, perfect and fresh upon my mind, and affected me very much as they did when I first knew them. I was astonished at being able to repeat, as rapidly as thought, in my mind, passages in every book I had ever read, even but once, and that, perhaps, years ago. Incidents of life, long forgotten, came trooping in sight, all vividly real, much more like original facts than memories. Much of this, although so clear and impressive and happening but a few weeks ago, is again fading rapidly out of my sight.

After these strange resurrections had passed for from one to two hours upon my mind, I looked up at the clock, which stood close to me; it indicated a few minutes to 11. At this time I became aware of a strange want of bodily sensation; I tried repeatedly to turn over on my bed, and to move my limbs, but could do neither, though I could move my eyes in any direction, and took repeated and scrutinizing looks about the room, and heard the small, soft sounds distinctly. The ticking of the clock sounded much louder than usual; indeed, all sounds for some days were painfully loud. I had as good evidence as ever in my life that I was awake, and keenly conscious to all I could see, hear or think. I looked up at the clock again; it was a few minutes past 11.

A strange thought now came over me, it was this: I will make the effort, and see if I cannot go out of my body. I smiled at the idea, as foolish and absurd, but still made the effort. A strange, unexpected phenomenon occurred; instead of falling, I seemed to succeed. Instead of an impalpable, subtle, intangible, nondescript something, it seemed like refined material, having a form just like the body, occupying every spot in it, from extremity to extremity. I seemed to feel it passing out from every individual pore in the skin, from fingers to toes, accompanied by a prickling sensation in every spot in me, as if gently touched in million points at once, by as many needles. The feeling was singular, but not painful, and lasted but an instant.

I now seemed to be conscious that I was out of the body, and between that and the wall overhead. I looked up, and was again astonished, for I seemed to see through the wall and roof, and saw the clouds and sky distinctly. I seemed to rise, passing through the wall and roof without trouble or any new sensation, and I thought of it then that I must have passed as electricity, heat or light passes through solid substances. When I seemed to be about fifty feet above the house, I looked back and saw my room, with every minute thing in it, and the body lying still with the eyes open and fixed. This moment was one of curious sensation, not happy, not painful.

It was a freezing night, the snow lying thick, with a cold wind blowing and the air frosty. I saw it, thought of it, but, strangely, I did not feel cold. I now seemed to pass directly over the village. I knew every house distinctly; I saw a light in one dwelling, and another in a grocery; I heard voices, which seemed to come from the chambers of the public house; one voice, in laughing, I distinctly recognized as that of Mr. Groat. I saw one person on the street; he crossed the street against the stone block, went around the block and up the walk, west; had on a cap and fur collar; had something on his arm; I thought him to be Dr. Lowe. I seemed to pass over the alley between the drug-store and tavern, over the water-side of the buildings on the upper end of Mill street, and came over the street about half way to the guide board to the station, followed the road to the hill on the Centerville road, then followed the flat, close to a high bank. Noticed a rock cropping through the snow, and crossed what seemed to be a wood-road. I seemed to pass over within hearing, and sometimes in sight, of the river, till directly over Centerville.

I saw the Fox bridge road, and another one crossing by the old Sanborn mill site. I saw a light at one house in Centerville, and heard a child cry, mingled with a shrill female voice, singing. Saw the railroad and a car standing on the track, and heard the sound of some one striking on iron; it sounded like a bar striking on a mill-dog.

I seemed to be now full 300 feet above the houses. Up to this point, I have been familiar with the country, but beyond it (in the direction I seemed to go) I have never been; in a little way the land seemed very broken; small sharp hills and deep depressions occurred; two places that I noticed looked as if scooped out, like a dish; one seemed not to be more than half a mile from Centerville. I noticed much woods for two or three miles, then more clearings for four or five, then more small new clearings and a good many log houses, but at this point things began to look dim, for I seemed now to be half a mile high, but I discerned vast forests. Before these were passed my height seemed such that all below me was a dim, hazy outline, and soon there seemed but an ocean of atmosphere around me, filled with sailing, broken clouds, sparkling stars, and a vast space—so vast, it seemed as though my former ideas had been mere child's thoughts upon it. One thing more seemed strange to me; the terrible momentum with which every thing seemed to fly under me, while I seemed to be moving quite gently, and yet, as rapidly as everything seemed to pass, I saw distinctly the minutest objects, until too high to perceive them.

From the point where I lost sight of all earthly objects, I seemed to hang motionless, yet I was conscious of moving with lightning speed. Soon it began to grow sensibly lighter, till it seemed light as day, and yet no sun. A region that seemed to look like substance came within view, and soon I seemed to be passing over its surface. I then began to see trees, looking like pictures of dwarf palms, and small streams seemed to be winding along, looking like very clear water, mixed with grains of floating quicksilver, and sparkling in the light much like snow crystals in a clear sunlight.

As I passed on, the trees became more plenty and larger, growing in clusters, without any small growth, decayed or fallen timber. Spots of flowers began to appear; some looked like those I had seen before, but most of them were new, and all had clearer, more vivid colors and more delicate forms. Many trees were wholly covered with flowers; one kind was splendid beyond description. The trees upon which it grew varied from 20 to 100 feet in height; after a feet every few inches put out a branch, a smooth, straight slender limb, without any leaves, tapering to a single point, tipped with a single flower, bell-shaped, with the brim downward, having all the colors of a rainbow, and arrayed in the same order, the darkest at the small end next the limb. The tree looked like a mass of flowers, shaped like a pine-apple. Soon, acres of plant flowers were under my eye; every thing looked like perfect spring in its vigor, without the smallest sign of decay anywhere. It would take a volume to faintly describe what I seemed to see and feel. The whole seemed perfection perfected, beauty beautified, glory glorified. Songs of birds, the most beautiful, floated everywhere; in short, it seemed to be life doubly alive, without the smallest sign of old age or decay; all seemed to be of refined, immortal material, having striking resemblances to this earth, but, upon thought little or nothing like it.

But soon my whole interest became centered in a new object. A human form was rapidly approaching me; when against me it stopped. I have admired strong manly beauty, been dazzled with glorious female beauty, I have felt my heart tingle at a sight of dimpled, rosy child beauty; I have been ravished with soul conceptions of angel beauty, but this was my highest ideal glorified. It was a lady; her lips moved, but I heard no sound, yet thoughts came flying to me, and I felt I knew what she would say. She was a stranger, in a hurry; she smiled, bowed and was gone.

A number of others passed, some near, some far off, some going as rapidly as thought, some moving very slowly, but all I noticed, when moving, showed elasticity and ability to move with inconceivable velocity. I looked for winged beings, but saw none except the birds. There seemed a surface on which all these things seemed to rest or move, and yet this surface seemed very ethereal, for I could look down through it. I thought then: Is this really unsubstantial or is it only owing to enlarged perception? Although the beings moved their limbs, they seemed to glide rather than walk, and motion (one told me) was the result of a wish of the mind, and not of the action of the form.

As I moved on, the people became more and more plenty, till at last it seemed an endless mass, with faces and openings in every direction. I saw no building, and nothing like eating or drinking, or any preparations for it; the whole business seemed to be passing from group to group, giving and receiving thought and feeling; the great motive power seemed to be to find the spot and the being, and add to his pleasure. Every countenance and open mind I seemed to see looked as if they were constantly thinking, communicating and receiving something beautiful and lovely, in which they seemed intensely interested, and perfectly happy. I looked and thought much on their garments, for they seemed to be clothed. All had loose, flowing robes; hands, feet and head naked. I was surprised that they were not all white and of the same pattern; many looked as if a piece of a rainbow had been woven into a warp of threads of white, silvery light, but all looked new and clean. I had as yet seen no person I knew, and I began to have a deep wish to see some person I had seen. While this wish was on my mind, a person I was then thinking of stood before me. I had not seen her coming, as I had others. At a glance, I read from her mind—"I have come as you wished." This was so sudden and strange that I was startled with thoughts of ghosts and apparitions. She smiled, and her lips moved, but I heard no sound, but I seemed to see and feel her meaning; it was this:—"I am real; the same you once knew in childhood and youth." I felt and thought with mighty intensity—I have believed in immortality, but now I see it, and how glorious above any former conception or feeling. I shall not repeat what she said—I shall call the facts read from her mind and others saying things. Thoughts and feeling in another seemed there just as real and tangible as sights and sounds had ever done, and intensely more impressive and certain. It affects me strangely, now, to remember how rapidly thoughts passed between us, the vast amount said, and the very little time it took. I thought with throbbing joy: Oh, what cannot be learned in another life. I shall never forget in this life things she told me of that state and region. A strange, undecided question has ever since been with me: was all this a mental phenomenon, shall I find what I seemed to see true? And what I was told that lay beyond, in an infinite vastness, will it be found to be a dream? I cannot tell—oh, how I wish I knew. She seemed to tell me much that occurred just before and at her death, of which there are living witnesses in Connecticut, and I shall write to satisfy myself whether the things she seemed to tell ever transpired.

I soon saw one I once well knew. When last I saw him on earth, he was a lad of about fifteen; he died after I left New England; he told me many things which I can find out whether true or not, by referring to persons now living, which he seemed to say were present. One thing struck me. It was that he would have lived, had he not been strangled in taking a pungent medicine.

I saw many others; I heard much. I saw much, and felt unutterable things; but I have written enough to exhibit the character of the phenomenon, fact or delusion, whichever it is.

I will describe only one thing more of many. I saw (or seemed to see) several times forms rapidly approach each other, and instead of turning out when they met, they seemed to pass directly through each other, like light through glass, heat through iron, or air through a sieve. The first time I seemed to see this I shuddered, for the momentum of the parties was such that it seemed they must be crushed by the collision, but, strangely, they seemed to emerge from each other, with all perfect as before. I now felt a pang of apprehension that I should not find my way back, for it was all the while present with me that I must return. I cannot say, while surrounded with such beauty, glory, intelligence, immortality and love, that I had a thought or wish to remain. I did think often with rapture "I shall see this place again." But, with the anxiety and the wish to go, I found myself rapidly moving away from the spot, and seemed to pass over exactly the same spots that I had in going; everything looked just as it did in going, except I saw no light or person and heard no voice anywhere. When over my own house I seemed to see my body as I left it; I seemed to descend to it, and in to it, felt the same prickling sensation as before, but it now lasted some moments.

I now felt cold, stiff and heavy, but moved my body and limbs without difficulty. I looked at the clock, it was a few minutes after one; in a few moments all things around me seemed natural, as usual in the transition state from insanity to soundness of mind. I have tried often to obtain the same condition since, but have utterly failed.

Now reader, I do not know what you may think of this; that is your business not mine. But it is printed on my mind in unfading colors, that two hours is before me like a glorious history of years. I give it no name, draw no deductions, build no theories upon it, and, reader, be careful how you do. The human

New Organization Delighted

The reorganizers in this county are delighted with the result of Tuesday's election so far as it applied to county, congressional and senatorial candidates. Its leaders claim they were not able to organize and direct the State but they felt that they were ably aided and abetted by the electors in their circle of activity. Especially are they gratified with the vote gotten out for the Republican nominees in Palermo and Parish, the neatness and dispatch with which these towns came out of the pockets of the gentlemen claiming to hold them therein, being a revelation to the aforesaid gentlemen and their friends.

Oswego County Wins

Jefferson County, in her greed to hold within her borders all elective offices without regard to fairness or decent treatment for sister counties, overreached herself on November 3, with the result that hereafter she will not hold the whip hand in the matter of senatorial nominations. Oswego county cast a larger Republican vote per thousand of population and she proposes to insist upon equal or majority representation in the Senatorial conventions hereafter.

Some of the Jefferson County papers maintain that the representation is based upon the presidential vote cast, but this is absolutely untrue and the argument will not stand. Had Jefferson county been true to party principle and to the party nominees she would have found Oswego county a congenial and helpful companion in district matters. As it is she is not even entitled to courtesy and will now be obliged to woo rather than to command, in matters political in the senatorial district.

Oswego county but stood by her colors and looked well to the best interests of the greatest number when she cast her vote. She is now entitled to the reward that should be hers.

Shall Tammany Rule

Governor-elect Dix, as he refuses or as he allows Tammany Hall to direct his appointments and legislative course during his tenure of office, will make or break his party in the Empire State. Admitted that Murphy is his political creator, it yet behooves him to turn a deaf ear to his sophistries and to regulate and rule with an eye single to the needs and demands of the vast commonwealth. He was elected by Republican votes, cast and withheld, and by Republican votes he can be re-elected to the political junk heap in 1912, if he proves false to the trust they imposed in him.

The Democrats were more surprised than the Republicans at their over whelming victory of November 3, and it is hoped that with the keen edge of delight worn down to the reasoning point, they will place responsibility above political preterment and become standpatters for the highest excellence in governmental life.

Before every elector today stands the revelation made during the Skene trial of a few months since, and Mr. Skene's pathetic statement that but for Tammany Hall's domination of the employes in his office, his record would have been an honest service and an enviable record. As it was Mr. Skene was acquitted of the fact of dishonesty, but confronting all is the truth in regard to his subordinates, appointed at the dictation of Tammany Hall, the richest and most powerful political organization in the world today.

Our New Congressman

Oswego County is right proud that she has within her borders a congressman-elect, Mr. L. W. Mott, although it is a grievous fact that he will belong to the minority when he takes his seat in the high legislative halls and that it will not be possible for him to secure as effective results for his constituency as though he belonged to the majority in the House. However he will be in harmony and co-operation with our great president, one of the most liberal Republicans before the world today, and that fact is gratifying and will give him a standing which would not have been accorded his opponent had he been victorious at the polls.

Congressman-elect Mott looks a Soliciting Contributions. The matter in happy vein. In an address made before the Columbia club reception tendered him in Oswego last week he said in substance that he considered his election due to the fact that the people of Oswego had awakened to civic pride and had stood together to see that an Oswego man met this success. He said that he knew that he had received the votes of many hundreds of Democrats and that he wished to thank them for their hearty support. He spoke of the loyalty of Watertown, Syracuse and other cities to their own and spoke especially about the non partisan receptions tendered Senator Cobb and John W. Carlisle by Watertown.

He said, smilingly, that the fact that he had received such a tremendous Democratic vote, ought to help him on entering a Democratic Congress for the reason that he should be able to go to the new leaders and demand attention to the interests of Oswego on the ground that he had had the loyal support of so many loyal Democrats. Speaking seriously he said that as the Congressman of this district he would go to Washington determined to do what he could for the best interests of the entire district and that he would be willing to listen to any reasonable request as he was the public servant of the people and desired to do their will. In conclusion he stated that when in Washington the latch string would always be hanging out for the people of Oswego but that the members of the Columbia club would be especially welcome.

MARRIED

Mr. George Maddock and Miss Eva Crocker were united in marriage on Thursday by the Rev. F. A. Miller. The bride was attended by her sister, Miss Lillian Crocker, and the best man was Mr. Henry Pelkey.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Rappole on Emory street was the scene of a pretty wedding on Wednesday evening, when their daughter, Miss Fannie E. Rappole, was united in marriage with Lester Howard Post. The decorative scheme was carried out in green and gold, foliage and flowers being used in the trimmings. The Rev. C. L. Peck, pastor of the First Methodist church, was the officiating clergyman and the ring service was used. The bride was becomingly attired in a dainty white gown and she carried white chrysanthemums. The bridal march was played by the bride's sister. Among the out-of-town guests present at the marriage were Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Inman and son of Oswego, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Emery and son of Oswego, Mrs. Mary Cooper of Watertown, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Rappole, Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Post, Miss Florence Loop, the Misses Nellie and Eliza Hutton, Mr. and Mrs. H. Richardson. After congratulations a bridal collation was served and Mr. and Mrs. Post left for parts unknown to spend their honeymoon. After which they will make their future home in this city where Mr. Post holds a position in one of the substations of the Syracuse, Lake Shore & Northern railroad company.

A pretty wedding took place at the rectory of St. Mary's church Saturday morning at seven o'clock when Miss Catherine A. Dempsey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Michael Dempsey, of 167 West Seneca street, became the bride of Mr. John Foley, a well known business man of Fulton, the Rev. Father Hopkins performing the ceremony.

The bride wore a gold colored silk gown and a picture hat and carried white chrysanthemums, while Miss Helena Dempsey, a cousin of the bride, was maid of honor and wore a dress of old rose mescaline, also wearing a picture hat and carrying white chrysanthemums. Richard Dempsey, a brother of the bride, was best man.

At eight o'clock a wedding breakfast was served at the bride's home, the dining room being handsomely decorated in green and white flowers, only relatives of the young people being present. Mr. and Mrs. Foley left on the 10:55 o'clock train for Schenectady and New York, where they will enjoy a honeymoon of two weeks, after which they will make their home in Fulton.

Mr. Foley conducts restaurants in Baldwinsville and Fulton. Mrs. Foley is a well known young woman of the first ward. Mr. and Mrs. Foley received many beautiful wedding gifts.—Palladium.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

The Board of Supervisors, composed of fifteen Democrats and seven Republicans, met in Oswego on Tuesday, as a canvassing board, but nothing has been done so far, the matter of selecting a clerk and a chairman having caused a hold-up. The Democrats claim to be in a position to dominate matters with the assistance of two insurgent Republicans, and they will endeavor to elect officials and name the committees.

The Board met at 11:30 this morning but too late for us to announce whether a truce had been declared or see the Crofoot & Knapp hats at not.

The Ghost of Clotop

A gruesome story of Clotop, known to Striford-on-Avon (which Mrs. Gaskell visited as a girl) is told in Mrs. Charles's book on the novelists. Charlotte Clotop, who was supposed to have died of the plague, was buried "with fearful haste." She was discovered when his ancestral vault was opened to receive another victim of the plague—leaning against the wall in her grave clothes; she was, indeed, dead, but in her agonies of despair and hunger she had bitten a piece from her shoulder. "Of course she has walked ever since," as Mrs. Gaskell says.

Eating Four Hundred Years Ago. Four hundred years ago eating was practically confined to two meals a day, but in many parts the second or evening meal was of such a protracted character that laws were passed limiting its duration. Thus at Berne there was a law against sitting at table more than five hours. At Rome from 10 o'clock in the morning to 6 o'clock in the evening was the maximum permitted, but the town council was unable to practice its own counsel of perfection and on great occasions feasted in private. In Saxony the housekeeper was forbidden to serve more than four dishes at one meal.

Ira, the 4-year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Ira Ives, died at the home in Mt. Pleasant on Sunday after a two weeks illness with typhoid fever. The funeral will be held this Wednesday and burial will be made in the Ives cemetery in Volney.

The death of Mrs. William Ware, aged 43, occurred at the home near this city on Tuesday night of last week. The funeral services were held on Friday, Rev. Charles Olmstead officiating, the interment was made in Jacksonville. The immediate survivors are the husband, two daughters, Blanche and Marion; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hall of Scriba, and one sister, Mrs. Young of New Haven.

The remains of Minnie, wife of Mr. Ernest Taylor, will be brought to this city this Wednesday from Medina for interment in Mt. Adnah beside the little son who passed away a month ago. The deceased was well known in this city where she spent most of her life, and she and her husband have many friends here. She was relieved from suffering on Sunday night. A brief service will be conducted at the grave at noon. The immediate survivors are the husband and one son, Jesse.

LONDON THEATERS.

The Historic Pit That is Fenced Off From the Stalls.

In the orchestra of a London theater there are only eight or ten rows of stalls, and immediately behind them is the pit, which is walled off by a barrier or fence that stretches clear across the theater. In the pit there are no individual seats—merely rows of long benches on which the people sit rather closely together.

It is, of course, impossible to reserve seats in advance, and people who are going to the pit have to come early on the evening of the performance in order to secure the best places.

Hence in the case of a popular play a long queue of people may be seen at 7 o'clock stretching from the pit door all along the sidewalk, waiting for the house to open. They keep their places very patiently in line, united by a common mood of pleasurable anticipation.

One manager while ago made the experiment of selling reserved seats in the pit at the usual price, but to this the pit people objected strenuously on the ground that they could seldom know in advance just when they would find themselves possessed of that happy combination of money and an evening off which would permit of theater going and preferred to take their chances waiting in line when the fortunate opportunity arrived.

The pit is patronized by people of a very estimable class and is often frequented by well educated men and women who wish to save money and do not care to dress. Whereas a seat in the stalls costs half a guinea (or approximately $2.50), a place in the pit costs only two and six (or approximately 90 cents), and the play can be seen very nearly as well.

In the pit the same program that is sold in the stalls for sixpence is sold for twopence, and the pit has a refreshment bar of its own which is cheaper than the main bar of the theater. Of course the real reason why there is a pit in the London theater is that there has always been a pit. That in itself is sufficient for the British mind, but it must be admitted that the system is on grounds of common sense an exceedingly good one.—Bookman.

TWO RAILROAD WRECKS

Friday night was a bad night for the O. & W. railroad in this city. Two bad wrecks taking place in the vicinity of Oneida street within four hours of each other. Two men were badly injured, one sustaining a crushed shoulder and another a badly cut head, both being taken to the Lee Memorial hospital. The property loss was thousands of dollars and it was Monday afternoon before the wreckage was all cleared away and the broken rails repaired.

The first wreck which occurred at 6 o'clock, was occasioned by a light freight going down grade at so tremendous a speed that it could not be stopped as desired and it crashed into the shifting engine, the two engines buckling like human things; in each others grasp they went perhaps 120 feet up grade, before they could be brought to a stand still. At 10 o'clock another freight going like mad and it is alleged in disobedience of orders, took the switch, the rails spread, and the result was indescribable, kindling wood splinters being made of the cars. That loss of life did not result is inexpressible.

HOUSE OF SURPRISES.

The Home of British Diplomacy, No. 10 Downing Street.

Why does the residence of the prime minister of the kingdom resemble the dwelling of a retired grocer of simple tastes? The reply to this is forthcoming. It does not. It only pretends to resemble the dwelling of a retired grocer. No. 10 Downing street begins to reveal itself as a surprise packet when you have rung one of its three bells and persuaded its front door to open. You then discover yourself in an entrance hall whose mats, walls and general shabbiness would be the instant ruin of a Bloomsbury temperance hotel, and you perceive that you have unwittingly done an injustice to the retired grocer. You decide that no grocer, at any rate no English grocer, would tolerate such a kennel.

But when you have penetrated a little farther, and especially when you have mounted the first flight of stairs, you will be ready to remodel your views once again. Within thirty seconds you will have lost your bearings. Within sixty you will admit that you are in a palace full of bewildering corridors and endless sumptuously, with here and there a glimpse of some immense and stately apartment. No. 10 Downing street begins just exactly where you might have expected it to finish. Its ramifications are innumerable, its geography an enigma even to the most ancient janitor.—From Philpotts and Arnold's "The Statue."

Shocked at Bar's Suggestion. "I don't think," said Mr. Rich to the prospective son-in-law, "that you can dress my daughter in the style besting her birth."

"Good gracious!" exclaimed the startled young man. "I wouldn't want to!"—Dundee Advertiser.

His Reason. "What reason have you for thinking that the defendant was badly intoxicated?"

"Well, your honor, when his wife called me over I found him in the cellar cutting kindling wood with the lawn mower."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The adoption by the State of Washington of a constitutional amendment giving women the right to vote is the most important gain made by the advocates of equal suffrage in the last fourteen years. Of the four states in which they now possess it, two granted it at a time when the suffragists had made little or no impression on the country at large. Wyoming allowed women to vote under the territorial regime from 1890 to 1896, and made no change in the law after admission to the Union in 1890. Colorado extended the suffrage to women in 1893 and Idaho and Utah in 1896. A long halt has been broken by Washington's action.—Ex.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

In case of a burn or scald what would you do to relieve the pain? Such injuries are liable to occur in any family and everyone should be prepared for them. For sale by all dealers.

BANK CHECKS.

The Part They Play in the Payment of a Debt.

A young man had kept in his possession for several days a check from his uncle. His uncle died, and he hastened to the bank to cash the check. When he found the bank would not pay the check until it had orders from the heirs or from the courts he was surprised and observed to his father that he thought of a check as being so much money if the signature was good.

As a matter of fact, however, a check is merely an order from A. to B., who holds some of A's money, to pay a certain amount thereof to C. It is not money, even if the names on the check are good and well known and the bank is solid as the government. Although checks are given in payment of debt and a receipt usually is signed on the spot, yet the passing of a check does not constitute payment of indebtedness until it is paid by the bank.

Nor will the concurrent receipting of the debt for which it is given change this. If the check is not paid on presentation to the bank the original claim stands against the drawer or giver of the check. But a certified check constitutes payment on the part of the person who draws it.

Checks may be antedated or postdated—that is, dated before or after the date of delivery. If postdated checks are paid before the day specified the drawer can recover the money, for the bank has acted not in accordance with any order from him, but on its own responsibility.

If a blank is left for the date the holder is authorized to insert the true date of delivery, but no other date. The insertion of any other date or changing the date without the consent of the drawer makes the check void.—New York Herald

Croup is most prevalent during the dry cold weather of the early winter months. Parents of young children should be prepared for it. All that is needed is a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Many mothers are never without it in their homes and it has never disappointed them. Sold by all dealers.

ANDREW CARNEGIE.

Many Reports Circulated About His Ill Health.

BIBLICAL TROUBLES.

Knotty Language Problems Translators Have to Solve.

Some of the riddles that have to be solved before the Bible can be translated into remote and barbaric tongues are cited in that annual wonder book, the popular illustrated report of the British and Foreign Bible society. How, for example, can you find a name for "lamb" among the inhabitants of some island where the only quadrupeds are pigs and rats? How can you render "whiter than snow" in the dialects of West Africa, where snow is utterly unknown?

Occasionally the difficulty is one of sheer space. Lengua, the speech of an Indian tribe in Paraguay, which has been furnished with the gospel according to St. Mark, is so unwieldy that the word eighteen can only be represented thus: "Sohogemek-wakthia-mok-emink-antanthiam." Literally translated, that means "finished my hands, pass to my other foot—three," for fingers and toes serve as units. The word for butter in Lengua is "wakky-anamankuktagunk-ikpith-muk," which means literally "the grease of the juice of the udder of the cow."

In New Guinea the translator wanted the proper idiom for "far be it from me to do this thing," so he consulted an intelligent catechumen. "Yes," replied the catechumen, "I understand exactly. We have the precise idiom. We say, 'May I speak to my mother-in-law before I will do this thing?'" for in that land of strange taboos one of the unpardonable sins is for a man to open his lips to his wife's mother.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

So They Do, Some of Them.

The teacher had been giving a class of youngsters some ideas of adages, and to test her training she put a few questions:

"Birds of a feather—do what?"
"Lay eggs," piped a small boy before anybody else could speak.

Lame back comes on suddenly and is extremely painful. It is caused by rheumatism of the muscles. Quick relief is afforded by applying Chamberlain's Liniment. Sold by all dealers.

Self Confidence.

Some one complained to Matthew Arnold that he was "getting as dogmatic as Carlyle."

"That may be true," he replied, "but you overlook the obvious difference. I am dogmatic and right, and Carlyle is dogmatic and wrong!"

Make Your Store Attractive to the Optimist

It is usually the optimist who spends money. The optimist loves the light—the pessimist the dark. Observe that the pessimist generally is a "tight wad."

Turn a searchlight upon the pessimist, who almost invariably poses as a "reformer"—and what a revelation you will get! The easiest method to win the optimist is the bright one. The HUMPHREY INVERTED LAMP SYSTEM opens the way. No other system can compare with it in economy, surety, quality or quantity of light.

SOUTH GRANBY

The fields are white with snow but the roads are a bed of mud.

We have had very unpleasant weather for the past three weeks and the snow is very discouraging to the many who have not got all their potatoes dug. We are hoping for better weather after the eclipse.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATIONS

President Taft's Thanksgiving proclamation is a big and sincere message to the people of this nation calling their attention to the material blessings that have been so bountifully bestowed upon us during the past year. The proclamation says:

"By the President of the United States of America—A Proclamation: "This year of 1910 is drawing to a close. The records of population and harvest, which are the index of progress, show vigorous and natural growth and the health and prosperous well-being of our communities throughout this land and in our possessions beyond the seas. These blessings have not descended upon us in restricted measures, but overflow and abound."

"We continue to be at peace with the rest of the world. In all essential matters our relations with other peoples are harmonious, with an ever-growing reality of friendliness and depth of recognition of mutual dependence. It is especially to be noted that during the past year great progress has been achieved in the cause of arbitration and the peaceful settlement of international disputes."

"Now, therefore, I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, in accordance with the wise custom of the civil magistracy since the first settlements in this land and with the rule established from the foundation of this government, do appoint Thursday, November 24, 1910, as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer, enjoining the people upon that day to meet in their churches for the praise of Almighty God and to return heartfelt thanks to Him for all His goodness and loving kindness."

"In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the city of Washington this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and ten, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-fifth."

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT.

Governor Horace White has issued the following Thanksgiving proclamation:

One hundred thirty-four years ago the province of New York became a state, and entered on a career of singular blessing and achievement. In the first year of its independence, a constitution was adopted, the framers of which declared that they aimed to institute such a government as is "best calculated to secure the rights and liberties of the good people of this state, most conducive of the happiness and safety of their constituents in particular and of America in general."

The purpose of the founders of the commonwealth was to create a self-governing community, in which men should attain happiness, and cultivate the social and individual virtues, under the institutions of freedom and equal opportunity. By the aid of these institutions and the advantages of a gracious environment, prosperity and felicity have come in abundant measure to their descendants and the multitudes that have cast in their lot with them. The history of our state is marked by all the features which contribute to the success and happiness of political communities and by all the tokens which men interpret as manifestations of Divine care and protection.

In the year which approaches its close, we have experienced no interruption of this signal course of bounty and favor. The advance of our people in the things that minister to the well-being of nations and the worth of human life has suffered no intermission; while the increase in the agencies of moral and social improvement has been accompanied in eminent degree by a generous return from the favoring seasons and the fruitful earth.

In view of the blessings with which the past year has been charged, it becomes us as people to make public acknowledgement of the goodness of Providence, and to declare our gratitude to God for His manifold gifts.

Now, therefore, I, Horace White, governor of the state of New York, by virtue of the authority vested in me by law, and in accordance with the time-honored custom, do hereby appoint Thursday, the twenty-fourth day of November, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and ten, as a day of General Thanksgiving.

Done at the Capitol in the city of Albany this twelfth (L. S.) day of November in the year one thousand nine hundred and ten.

By the Governor
GEORGE A. GLYNN,
Secretary to the Governor.

COUNTING THE PEOPLE.

First Census Proposal in England Raised a Fine Row.

It was in 1753 that a proposal to count the people was first made. Thomas Potter, son of the archbishop of Canterbury and member for St. Germans, introduced in that year a bill "for taking and registering an annual account of the total number of the people and of the total number of marriages, births and deaths and also of the total number of poor receiving alms from every parish and extra-parochial place in Great Britain." It was inevitable, of course, that directly this proposal was made the precedent of King David should be quoted. And many were the jeremiads as to the alternative evils which would befall the country. Those submitted to David were mild in comparison. Mr. Thornton, member for York city, said:

"I did not believe that there was any set of men or indeed any individual of the human species so presumptuous and so abandoned as to make the proposal we have just heard. I hold this subject to be totally subversive of the last remains of English liberty. The new bill will direct the imposition of new taxes, and indeed the addition of a few few words will make it the most effectual engine of rapacity and oppression that was ever used against an injured people. Moreover, an annual register of our people will acquaint our enemies abroad with our weakness."

Matthew Ridley, another opposing member, added that his constituents looked on the proposal as ominous and feared lest some public misfortune or an epidemic distemper should follow the numbering. However, the bill passed the commons only to be promptly rejected by the lords. Not until 1800 was the proposal again made, and on this occasion it was brought to a successful issue. The first census of England and Wales was taken in March, 1801.—Westminster Gazette.

want to thank the Republicans of Jefferson and Lewis Counties. I feel specially thankful to the hundreds of Democrats, friends and neighbors in Oswego City who cast aside party ties to vote for me. Their action is the best answer that can be made to the abuse and malicious insinuations with which the opposition saw fit to conduct the campaign. The people of Oswego know me, and they have answered for me. Under the circumstances and considering the vote on the state ticket, I think that Jefferson and Lewis Republicans did very well so far as my vote is concerned. As I have said before, I am going to Congress to represent the people of this district irrespective of county or party lines. I am going there to do just what the people want if they will let me know. I believe that this is a very important district, and I shall certainly use my best endeavors to properly look after its interests.

A WHALE IN A HURRY.

The Truthful Mariner Tells How Fast the Big Fellow Went.

"Sometimes you can put an iron into a whale and he won't splash on the surface, but will start off like a rocket or perhaps will go right down and you have to cut loose and lose your line and trawl," said the truthful old mariner.

"We were lying becalmed one day off the Cape of Good Hope. By and by we saw two or three whales coming up to blow about two miles away."

"The captain called the watch up, and a couple of boats started for the whales, which were lying still, as if sunning themselves. We raced with the other boat and got ahead, for my men were lithe and tough, and by and by we got alongside of one of the big fellows. The steering oar was pulled in, the oars were packed—that is, piled in so that they couldn't strike the water—then an iron was thrown into the floating island."

"The whale lay still for a moment, as if struck with amazement that any one should dare to touch him. Suddenly he made up his mind what to do. He started off like a locomotive, the rope whizzing around in a way to astonish a landlubber. When the rope was out we were rushing by the captain's boat like mad."

"All we could do in that double ended boat was to sit still and see her go through the water. I candidly believe that we went at the rate of a mile a minute, and the water was a very wonderful sight. It reminds me, now that I think of it, of Poe's description of the interior of the maelstrom, where the water went round so fast and was so black that it must have seemed like a wall of polished ebony."

"The pressure downward piled the water up on both sides of us so that it seemed to be at least three feet higher than the edge of the boat, but it couldn't run in, for we were going so fast it hadn't time."

"Every one's eyes were blurred with the wind, which seemed to be blowing a hurricane against us. It looked as if the whale would never get tired out, and we were going to see an amazing race. The ship went away as if by magic, and we had lost sight of the other boat. Finally the line all at once slackened."

"The whale hadn't stopped and, for all I know, is going ahead at the rate of a mile a minute still, but the iron had come out."

"We rowed back to the ship, and as we came along the captain called over the rail:

"Where's the whale?"

"Oh," said I, "the iron melted out, he went so fast."

"Just what I thought," said the captain, and that night we all had plum dum and grog."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

FULTON'S MEAT PRICES HOLD HIGH

Have Varied Little, if Any—Armour and Cudahy Think Prices Will Go Lower Owing to Large Corn Crop—Consumers Impatiently Waiting

Despite the fact that the newspapers are telling their readers that meat prices are lower, Fulton is not aware of the fact from any personal encounter with the lowered prices. Perhaps pork loins have fallen 2c per pound, but otherwise the high prices have not varied any. The New York Herald of November 18 gave several columns to the discussion of the matter of prices and quoted some of the largest packers in the country. Among those quoted and what they said, were J. Ogden Armour and Edward A. Cudahy.

Mr. Armour said: There had not only been a reduction in the price of meats and other stock yard products, but that the prevailing tendency was toward a lower level. In the opinion of Mr. Armour the general public should not be too hasty in reaching the conclusion that the skies have been grazed for a coast-side from the pinnacle of top notch prices to the bottom of everything cheap. He believes that the descent will be gradual and that the level will not be reached for several months at least.

Generally speaking, present prices are lower, and I believe they are working toward a still lower level. The present situation is the result of an enormous corn crop and of previous higher prices that stimulated everybody to raise live stock. The public is getting the benefit of present conditions and should get farther benefits as the increased supply of live stock comes to the market.

The recent high price of meats and packing house products cannot be attributed in any way to the packers or to any combination of persons or firms engaged in the packing industry. It has been due to conditions that developed from scarcity and a high price for corn, which is the basis of the supply of live stock.

Conditions in live stock raising are bigger than any packer or set of packers. The packers welcome lower prices. Our prices are based on what we have to pay for live stock and the sooner the people and the world at large realize that fact the better it will be for everybody.

I believe when that fundamental fact is understood generally the people will be glad that they have the packing industry. No number of small concerns could begin to do business on so small a margin of profit as the packers.

The consumer should not flatter himself with the thought there is to be a sudden drop from high to low prices and that his grocery bills for meats are to be greatly reduced at once. That cannot be and will not be. Still, I repeat that the conditions and the outlook promise a more favorable price situation for the consumer.

Mr. Cudahy said: "I think prices will go still lower, I am not prepared to state just how much lower. The decrease in prices is due to the tremendous corn crop produced in this as well as in other countries. The world-wide grain crop has rendered smaller than usual the demand for the American grain that has left a surplus of corn in this country with the result that prices have dropped."

"Farmers are refusing to sell at the market prices and prefer rather to feed the grain to live stock. That naturally increases the supply of live stock and these prices have dropped in proportion to the decrease in corn. The country was prepared for a short crop and prices of grain and meat had soared accordingly. When the actual crop was produced, it was seen that it is far above the average one. A decline was sure to follow, and, in fact, the packers have been selling meats at lower prices for sixty days. The cut was slight, however, but within the last few days the cut has been heavy. Prices on fresh meat everywhere will drop at once, but salt and cured meats will not fall appreciably for possibly sixty days."

The New York city butchers expressed to the effect that what was known to the trade as common meats were becoming scarcer, while the better grades were growing more plentiful. The common meats are those obtained from the unfattened range cattle which have been rushed to the Eastern markets as a result of the roundups previous to the winter season. Now, however, the corn fed animals are beginning to arrive in large numbers.

Lower meat prices have made themselves felt throughout the country, one of the immediate reasons of this reaction from the high prices that have prevailed for so long being the great runs of cattle that reached the Western markets during the last week. The beef packers are chary about admitting their price reductions, but that such have been made is evident in the quotations of the retail dealers of this city.

Steaks sell at 15c in Denver, Col., instead of at 22 1/2c. In St. Louis the prices are 4c to 6c lower than two weeks ago and so on throughout the West.

Fulton's turn may yet come to secure meats at living prices.

ALUMINUM PLANT ASSURED

Mr. N. L. Whitaker of the firm of Whitaker & Lovejoy, was in New York city last week where he completed the arrangements and turned over to the Aluminum Specialties Manufacturing Company, possession of the American Tobacco company's plant on the west side. The property acquired by the new company gives plenty of room for expansion and it also consists of two buildings, one a three-story affair, 50x130 feet, and the other a one-story structure, 70 feet square, both built of brick and two of the best constructed mill buildings. In these the new company has a floor space aggregating 24,400 square feet.

The company was induced to come to Fulton by the Chamber of Commerce and as it is sound financially, did not ask much assistance, and is established and with a rapidly extending territory of sales, it is destined to become one of our leading industries. Local business men are interested in the corporation, which will employ over fifty skilled workmen at the start and they will bring several new families to Fulton.

The new company has taken over the holdings of the Utica Aluminum and Novelty works of Utica and incorporation papers have been filed by the new company's attorney, H. J. Wilson. The capital stock has been placed at $75,000 and the company will start business with $40,000 paid in. Work will be commenced immediately upon the refitting of the plant and the removal of the equipment of the Utica plant to this city. A new heating system is to be installed in the plant.

The incorporators of the new corporation are John R. Sullivan, C. R. Lee, and Fred I. Palmer of Fulton and Thomas S. Jackson and G. H. Spitali of Utica. The directors named for the first year are: J. W. Rigley, E. J. Penfield, J. R. Sullivan and N. L. Whitaker of Fulton and Thomas S. Jackson, George H. Spitali and M. L. White of Utica.

Mr. White will remove to this city where he will take the management of the concern.

MAGNIFICENT MORTUARY CHAPEL

Mrs. Eva Case Lee Gives Chapel in Memory of Her Parents—The Most Expensive Mortuary Chapel for Its Size in the State.

The magnificent mortuary chapel given to Fulton by Mrs. Charles R. Lee, in memory of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Marcus Case, is completed and ready for use at the season of the year when its grateful shelter will be most deeply appreciated by bereaved friends. The presentation has been made with out ostentation but the generosity of the donor has not been the less appreciated because of that fact. Mrs. Lee considered but two results in her gift—the commemorating of her parents' memory and the crying necessity of Fulton for such a building.

A few years ago the Mt. Adnah Cemetery Association contemplated the erection of a mortuary chapel. Plain and substantial, but not such an one as the memorial just completed. Mrs. Lee learned of their purpose and craved the privilege of giving it. The detail was arranged and it stands today a magnificent and enduring monument to the memory of the departed and to the thoughtful generosity of the living donor.

The chapel is located on an eminence west of the drive and in front of the Mt. Adnah receiving vault. It was designed by a Buffalo firm and erected by a local firm. It has required two years for completion. The exterior is of Gouverneur granite and the interior of pressed brick. The floor is mosaic of Italian tile. There are eight windows costing $100 per window, the room being octagon shaped. Beneath the east window is a slight platform for book and pedestal. The window is a memorial window and represents the Resurrection. In front of the platform is a modern lowering device for the casket. Heavy oak doors, copper trimmed, open into the vestibule and handsome grill work separates the vestibule from the main room. The seating capacity of the chapel is seventy-five and everything is most modern throughout. A heating plant and city water are among the appliances installed. The building itself is practically indestructible. The roof is of tile; the cornice and trimmings of heavy art copper, a lantern dome and two smaller domes at either corner of the building being of the metal. The basement opens directly into the receiving vault through double doors. The casket is mechanically lowered from the first floor to the basement and the mourners are spared the depressing sight of the vault. The casket can be left after the services, resting upon the device and amid its pleasant surroundings, while the friends depart to their homes. The recollection being far more pleasing than the sight of the vault and its yawning depths waiting to envelope the casket.

The memorial chapel cost over $15,000 and is one of the most highly appreciated possessions of the city. Its worth will become more and more appreciated as the younger generations grow into mature years and stand at the bier of parents and friends in this beautiful chapel dedicated to memory. It is not built for one or two generations but to stand until the end of time.

Within the chapel is a tablet upon which is inscribed, "Mrs. Eva Case Lee, in memory of her father and mother, George Marcus Case and Vandalia Case."

GAS COMPANIES IN TROUBLE

The Public Service Commission, Second district, has begun proceedings against a number of gas companies who are selling gas of inferior quality. State standards of illuminating power and purity are prescribed and the companies are supposed to manufacture and distribute their product in accordance with these standards. To see that they do the commission has a force of inspectors who are constantly employed in testing gas. These tests are made without warning to the companies. If the inspector reports a deficiency, the company is notified and is directed to take steps to improve the quality. The Oswego Gas Company is among the number not up to the standard.

The Fulton Gas Company's product is above the standard and the company is to be congratulated upon this fact.

CITIZENS CLUB TO ENTERTAIN

A Program of Unusual Merit Will Be Presented Dec. 7.

The Entertainment Committee of the Citizens club, Messrs. T. H. Webb, S. B. Mead, W. C. Burns, T. M. Ripley and A. L. Rice, have arranged for a series of entertainments to be given by the club during the coming season. The first Ladies' Night will be given on Wednesday evening, December 7, when the Evening Bazaar-Concert Company will furnish the entertainment.

This concert company is one of the best appearing before the public in park work today. Miss Bargett enjoys a national reputation as a cartoonist and reader. She is described as one who charms her audience with flashes of wit and humor, while her pictures are taking shape under her deft fingers, and surprises all by the display of her diverse talents, in each of which she excels.

The other members of the company are very talented musicians. Leon Batchelder is a king of the flute and piccolo with individual character of technique. Francis Jones has recently been styled a "wizard of the piano." He is a brilliant, daring artist and his playing is marked with strong individuality. Percy A. Fullinwider is a violin player of whom Americans may well be proud. His bowing is remarkable, his harmonics full and resonant, always true and pleasing. He plays with an ability that arouses the highest enthusiasm.

The entertainment provided by the committee for the club members and their guests promises to be a most enjoyable event.

SUPERVISORS IN DEADLOCK

39 Ballots Taken—Broken on Monday by Supervisor Fuller, Fulton—F. E. Sweetland for Chairman and William J. Mahaney for Clerk

For the first time since when the mind of man knows not, there is a Democratic clerk to the Board of Supervisors and the vote of the members is almost tied; seventeen Republicans, two of which have so far voted with the Democrats, and fifteen Democrats, comprising the county legislature.

The Board met on Monday of last week and proceeded to ballot for chairman with the result that the vote was tied as between Messrs. F. E. Sweetland of Oswego and W. M. Barker of New Haven. Thirty-nine ballots were cast during the week, without result, and an adjournment was taken until Monday afternoon. In the meanwhile the friends of both contestants had been very busy trying to arrange a truce with the head of Mr. W. W. Spencer, for seven years Republican clerk to the Board, hanging in the balance. Mr. Sweetland and the fifteen Democratic members of the Board would vote for anyone other than Mr. Spencer it was stated, and Mr. Barker and the other fifteen Republican members of the Board would vote for no one other than Mr. Spencer for clerk. Repeated conferences were of no avail.

On Monday morning a number of the prominent Republicans in the Fourth and Fifth wards of this city met in conference in Attorney H. J. Wilson's law offices and discussed the Supervisor Clerkship. A free and full discussion of the matter Supervisor Fuller was sent for and he was advised to go to Oswego, and at the Monday session of the Board of Supervisors to nominate Attorney Louis Rice of this city for clerk. If the Republican members of the Board would elect him, well and good, they would be satisfied. In the event of their not electing Mr. Rice, Fuller should then vote for Mr. Mahaney for clerk, thus breaking the tie and electing Mr. Sweetland chairman. Their fight was entirely and only on Mr. Spencer for clerk. Mr. Fuller had been personally very friendly toward Mr. Sweetland's candidacy and but awaited the approval of his constituents before taking a decisive step in that direction.

When the time came to vote for clerk of the Board, Mr. Fuller placed the name of Louis Rice in nomination. Supervisor John Woods, Captain of the Fifth ward, Oswego, had already nominated William J. Mahaney and Edward Andelfinger had nominated W. W. Spencer.

When the roll was called there were 15 votes for Spencer, 16 for Mahaney and 1 for Rice.

On the next ballot Mr. Fuller voted with Mr. Sweetland and the Democrats for Mr. Mahaney and he was elected. He was sworn in on Tuesday afternoon.

Mr. Fuller's action has aroused considerable comment and discussion throughout the city and he has in turn been praised and censured. He assures the Times that his stand with Mr. Sweetland was a personal matter only and that so long as Supervisor Sweetland was a Republican he does not see why he should not have the privilege of voting for him. He was from the start opposed to Mr. Spencer, he says, and the tenor of the conference was in keeping with his inclination all the time, that in voting as he did he but carried out his personal wishes and the wishes of many of his friends in both wards. It was a matter of principle with

IN MEMORY OF T. M. COSTELLO

Mrs. Costello, widow of the late Hon. T. M. Costello, has presented to the village of Altmar a soldier's monument in commemoration of the memory of her husband. It was Mr. Costello's intention, had he lived, to do this gracious and generous deed and his widow has carried out his desires in this line.

The village of Altmar is indeed to be congratulated upon being the recipient of so beautiful a tribute to the memory of her brave dead.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE MEETS

Friday evening's session of the Chamber of Commerce was well attended and considerable routine business was transacted. Reports from several committees were received and it was voted to change the By-Laws so that the annual meetings would hereafter be held on the third Friday in January, rather than the third Wednesday.

A number of new members were voted upon and accepted, a healthy growth in membership being apparent, nearly double the number being on the membership list this year over last. A great deal of interest is taken in the sessions also and several new concerns asking for privileges in Fulton are being considered.

President E. J. Penfield spoke of the new company to locate soon in the old American Tobacco company's plant and was pleased that all negotiations had been concluded and that the busy wheels would soon be turning and the vacant buildings be teeming with industrial life.

Mr. Lynn Richardson of the Citizens Band bespoke the favor of the Chamber for his musical organization in their efforts to secure new uniforms, instruments, music, etc. No action was taken on the matter.

An oyster supper and social evening followed the business session.

CONGRESS DEMOCRATIC

The summary of the next Congress shows a Democratic majority in that body, with one socialist, a member from Wisconsin. While the election is close in a score of districts, the Republicans winning will not be enough to reduce the Democratic lead materially, although many contests will be carried to the House Committee on Elections. The Democratic majority is fifty.

Why The Tarring of Roads is Injurious to Vegetation.

It has been known for a long time that the vapor given off by hot tar is poisonous to plants. Statements to this effect have appeared from time to time as the expression of the unfortunate experiences especially of green-house men. Walls, woodwork, etc., about green houses are often treated with melted tar as a waterproof material; and when the tar is heated in open kettles out of doors, near growing plants, these plants very quickly show the effects. The leaves become spotted, and a thorough smoking results in the death and the fall of the leaves and may even cost the life of the more sensitive plants in the immediate vicinity of the melting-pot. Once the tar is cooled on the wood or stone or other work of the greenhouse it is harmless; but while it is hot it is poisonous, and tar-paints should never be used for steam-pipes or hot-water pipes for this reason.

Mr. Honore's article, entitled "The Effect of Tarring Roads Upon Trees and Shrubs," is a little misleading, as one may infer from the above; for it is not the tarred road which produced the injuries described, but rather the incautious way in which the tar was heated. This resulted in exposing the trees, shrubs, and herbaceous plants to the vapors of tar. Except for cutting off the water supply and for producing the associated unnatural conditions in the soil, tar on a road does no harm to the plants growing beside it. In this respect tar is much better than some of the oils commonly used as binders on the roads in various parts of this country, for these oils may travel by capillarity and otherwise for considerable distances through the soil bordering a road and produce considerable damage.

If your readers care for a fuller discussion of this question, they will find one in Haselhoff and Lindau's "Die Beschädigung der Vegetation durch Rauch," Leipzig, 1903. There are other German references, but none in English which I can give. I shall be glad however to supply any information that I may be able to if any is desired.

ILLEGAL LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Hotel Keepers Must Not Do a Botle Business in Towns Where Store Keeper's Traffic is Not Allowed

Many complaints are being received at the Excise Department alleging violations of the Liquor Tax Law by hotel keepers in towns where the local option questions have been submitted, and a negative vote has been given on question two, which prohibits traffic in liquor not to be drunk on the premises where sold. The law clearly and expressly provides that no hotel keeper or any other person can lawfully traffic in liquor to be drunk off the premises where sold, in towns where the voters have denied that right by voting in the negative on question two. It is evident that many hotel keepers in such towns do not understand this but such violations will be vigorously prosecuted where proper evidence there of is obtained by or submitted to the State Department of Excise.

INTEREST ON POSTAL SAVINGS

Payable Only Once a Year — Long Term Deposits Wanted

Washington, D. C.—A plan for the computation of interest on postal savings was adopted today at a meeting of the board of trustees in the office of Postmaster General Hitchcock. The act establishing postal savings banks is not altogether clear as to the exact method of determining interest, and there has been some divergence of opinion as to how the law should be construed. Under the interpretation agreed on today interest on deposits will be payable once a year. No interest on an original deposit will be payable until the first twelve months have elapsed. The purpose of the board in thus construing the law is to encourage depositors to leave their money on deposit for a considerable period, thus inducing the saving habit. Interest at the rate of 2 per cent will be allowed.

In order to make the accounting necessary in computing interest simple the board adopted a resolution providing that interest shall be allowed from the first day of the month following the date of deposit. For the convenience of depositors a table will be engraved on each certificate of deposit that will show the exact amount of interest to which the holder of the certificate is entitled at any given period.

FIRST SUBMARINE.

The American-Turtle Was Tried Out at New York in 1776.

GAVE THE BRITISH A SCARE.

Her Attempt to Blow Up the English Frigate Asia Didn't Succeed, but the Enemy's Ships Fled in Terror—Her Second Escapade Sealed Her Fate.

The American Turtle deserved a better fate. It was the first submarine war vessel of the United States. It was tried out in 1776 in New York harbor. Its inventor and builder was David Bushnell of Connecticut, of whom little is known. The man who went under water with it and in New York bay tried to blow up the British frigate Asia, under General Washington's orders, was Colonel Ezra Lee.

The Turtle was built at Saybrook, Conn. After its vicissitudes of being captured, sunk and resting for years at the bottom of the East river it was raised and taken back to its birthplace. There, after more years, it was taken to pieces. Its metal went into grandfather's clocks, which are still ticking in the hallways of New York and New England homes. Its oaken, pitch smeared timbers were put to structural uses and all trace of them lost. Bushnell did not get even a tardy reward for his inventiveness. The council of safety of Connecticut in 1777 directed that he be paid $200 for his services in "annoying ships," but there is no record that he ever got the money.

Here is the story of the American Turtle's first exploit as it is told in the quaint phraseology of the yellowing manuscript where it was set down long ago:

"When the British fleet lay in the North river, opposite the city of New York, and while General Washington had possession of the city he was very anxious to be rid of such neighbors. David Bushnell of Saybrook invented a submarine curiosity called the American Turtle, which received General Washington's approval for that purpose. A brother of the inventor was to operate the machine, but on trial he declined to hazard his service. Colonel Lee, distinguished for his courage and patriotism, volunteered his services, and after practicing with the machine to discover its powers a night was fixed upon for the attempt.

"General Washington and his associates in the secret took their stations upon the roof of a house on Broadway, anxiously awaiting the result. Morning came, but no intelligence of the bold navigator. While the anxious spectators were about to give him up as lost several barges were seen to start suddenly from Governors Island, then in possession of the British, and move toward some object near the Asia, ship of the line, and as suddenly they were seen to put about and steer for the island with springing oars. In two or three minutes an explosion took place from the surface of the water, resembling a waterspout, which aroused the whole city. The enemy's ships took the alarm, cut their cables and proceeded to the Hook with all possible dispatch, sweeping their bottoms with chains and with difficulty preventing their frightened crews from leaping overboard.

"Colonel Lee, coming to the surface during this scene of consternation, was obliged again to descend to avoid the enemy's shot from the island. After forcing his machine against a strong current under water he landed safe at the Battery amid a great crowd, General Washington expressing himself as much pleased that the object was effected without the loss of life.

"Colonel Lee had been under the Asia more than two hours endeavoring to penetrate her bottom, which, being sheathed with copper, resisted all attempts to attach the magazine to the ship."

Apparently the American Turtle made one more attempt to "annoy the enemy's shipping" before she ended her career. Another old diary preserved by a Connecticut family mentions this incident. It seems that the Turtle, manned by some nameless hero, perhaps again by Colonel Lee, though the chronicler does not state, made an attempt to blow up a British ship in the East river. By this time the British appear to have discovered what nature of craft it was that had essayed to destroy the Asia and so were on the lookout for anything suspicious that disturbed the surface of the water. At any rate, the American submarine was discovered before she had made any progress on her second mission of destruction.

The British boats gave chase. Considering that the maximum speed of the Turtle was three miles an hour, the pursuit could not have been a very long one. At any rate, an American vessel, probably some small schooner, was waiting for the submarine, and the Turtle fled thither for protection. Finally the odd looking craft was hoisted aboard, sail was set, and the American boat tried to show a "clean pair of heels" to her pursuer, but it was in vain. She was sunk by the English ships.

For a long time the Turtle lay in the submerged vessel's hold. After the war was over, however, the ship was raised and the Turtle was recovered and carried back to Saybrook. If every one else had forgotten her and her achievements by that time the people of her inventor's native town still held the Turtle in affectionate remembrance.—Theodore S. Dayton in Boston Post.

20 Years With Heart Trouble

"Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy has cured me of heart disease of over 20 years' standing. I was so bad that I could not do my work, and could scarcely draw a full breath without fainting or smothering. The doctor told me he could do no more for me; then I commenced taking the Heart Remedy. I shall never forget that night. I slept better than I had before in months. I kept right on getting better, until I was perfectly well."

MRS. LAURA RUSSELL,

Logan, Iowa.

When the heart action is weak, it fails to pump the blood through the lungs with sufficient rapidity. Then the lungs do not absorb the proper amount of oxygen, although they may be taking in a normal amount of air. The result is shortness of breath, smothering spells, difficult breathing, oppressed feeling in chest. Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy strengthens the heart nerves and muscles, and in this way increases the circulation.

Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

Thanksgiving Day

It is the sincere wish of the Times that its readers may enjoy the morning, the day set apart by law and by precedence for national thanksgiving, and shall find in their condition ample cause for rejoicing and thanksgiving in both the spirit and the letter of the term. Certainly we have been favored by Providence and by government far beyond our deserts. Every heart knows its own sadness, yet each one of us should be broad enough to rejoice with neighbors and friends that they and we have been spared greater calamity. In our own abundance we will not observe the spirit of the day if we do not generously remember the less fortunate in our midst, especially the little children.

Revolution in Mexico

The civilized world and the United States in particular, watches with interest and apprehension the fight now being waged in old Mexico between the Diaz, or government, and the anti-Diaz forces. From all that can be gleaned from telegraphic dispatches which are rigidly censored, the situation is desperate with the outcome not at all certain.

For thirty years President Diaz has ruled the republic with an iron yet a fairly just hand. Foreign capital was made welcome in the country and found good return from investment when the project was a legitimate one. England, France, America, Germany, all have vast interests within Mexican boundary lines and vast numbers of citizens have homes there. In the danger which threatens their people and their interests all these countries have a common concern. Whether or not the uprising of the past week is deep seated and will continue until the overthrow of the Diaz regime is accomplished, or whether it is a spasmodic effort on the part of political malcontents to gain control, has not yet been disclosed. It is safe to assert that the loss of life and property thus far has been enough to stagger humanity, even though the reports received are so meagre.

MR. STRANAHAN'S FRIENDS BUSY

Ever since it became known that Hon. N. N. Stranahan was returning to his home in this city this week, his friends have been quietly booming him for the Supreme Justiceship and the proposition has been received with enthusiasm, when broached. Mr. Stranahan retired from political activity several years ago, owing to ill health, and he has not signified his intention of re-entering the political arena, but his friends insist that he shall do so and he may finally yield to their importunities; although it would seem that a diplomatic post abroad as Uncle Sam's representative would be more fittingly in keeping with his talents and ambition.

At any rate Oswego County should have a resident Justice.

DEATHS

Josephine, aged 67, widow of the late Martin Rabear, died at her home in Oswego on November 20. The funeral services were held from St. Louis's church this Wednesday morning.

William M. Evans, aged 82, brother of Mrs. Merrick S. Stowell of Oswego, a native of Mexico, died on Sunday at the home of his sister after a long period of ill health. Mrs. Stowell is now left the only surviving member of her family.

Mrs. Joseph Decker, aged 86, a former resident of this city, died at her home in San Diego, Calif., on Friday. The remains will probably be brought to this city for interment. The immediate survivors are three sons, Joseph and Frederick of this city and John of Syracuse, and four daughters, Mrs. Oscar Danforth and Mrs. David La May of San Diego, Cal., Mrs. Eugene Miller, Providence, R. I., and Miss Louise Ackor of Schenectady.

Death claimed Amos Lagdon, aged 78, on Wednesday of last week. He had been in usual health for several weeks and on the morning of his death ate breakfast and attended to his routine work, not complaining of illness until too late for medical attendance to be secured before he passed away. The deceased was one of the oldest and best known residents of this city, having at one time conducted a grocery store, but later he engaged in carpenter and contract work, making a success of the venture. For a few years past he has retired from active life but has retained his interest in all that pertained to his home of the past 40 years. The funeral services were held from the late home on Saturday afternoon, the Rev. G. W. Wellburn of the Presbyterian church officiating. Burial was made in the family lot in Mt. Adnah. Beside the stricken widow, two daughters survive, Mrs. John D. McIntyre of this city and Mrs. J. J. Wright of Syracuse.

VANQUISHED BANQUET VICTORS

An Attendance Contest Resulting in An Enjoyable Banquet Given by the Losing Side—Entertaining Literary Program.

The Philathea class of the First Baptist church in May organized an attendance contest which closed recently and the victors were on Friday evening given a banquet by the losing side, which was most unique and enjoyable.

The contest itself was unusual and embodied many new features which added to the enthusiasm of the contest and the pleasure of the banquet, being fruitful of results and of fun. The contest took the form of a trip to the Holy Land, each attendant at the class meetings adding a hundred miles toward the completion of the trip. Two ships, the Syrian Monarch, captained by Mrs. George Gardner, and the Cypress, captained by Miss Ada Wright, with full crews each and the attendance at the meetings of the class comprising the passenger list for their respective ships, started upon the cruise. The Syrian Monarch came in far ahead of the Cypress, and the result was the banquet on Friday evening given by the captain, crew and passengers of the slow boat.

The dining tables were spread in the church parlors and looked very inviting in their decorations of silver, china, cut glass and lighted with candleabra. Thirty-six guests were present. The captains of the rival ships, with crews next and passengers following, occupied the two sides of the tables as arranged. The place cards were in the form of the Philathea emblem, the crescent and bar, in blue, and they were placed on the white napkins. The following delectable menu was served: Creamed Oysters on Rosettes, Mashed Potatoes, Salad, Brown and White Bread Sandwiches, Marshmallow coxport with Cherries.

Prior to the meal the guests and hostesses joined hands and sang, "Blest be the tie that binds."

At the conclusion of the meal a most brilliant toast list was presented. Miss Ada Wright gracefully officiating at toastmistress and calling upon the following for responses:

"The start and the finish," Mrs. George Gardner. In this toast Mrs. Gardner gave a history of the movement for class attendance from inception to conclusion, with much of the entertaining and amusing interwoven with the more serious thoughts.

"Incidents of the trip of the Syrian Monarch," Mrs. Mary Emerick. This was one of the best toasts of the evening and has been most favorably commented upon by all who heard it.

"Incidents of the trip of the Cypress," Mrs. E. E. Hart. The toast brought forth considerable applause when the speaker announced that the ship stopped frequently and organized Philathea classes enroute, in explanation of its not reaching its destination as soon as the Syrian Monarch.

"The Philathea as a tree," Miss Ada Wright. This speaker treated the old form of Sunday school class as the roots; the present Philathea's as the trunk and the branches as the future, holding much of hope for future growth and good.

"The roots," Miss Elizabeth Osgood. The speaker scored many telling points in her toast and was witty and grave almost in the same breath, treating her subject in a happy manner throughout.

"The trunk," Miss Lillian Pratt. In this toast the speaker showed deep study and thought. She unfolded the Philathea pennant with its blue background and letters of white, and spoke of the class emblem as signifying that they were lovers of truth and reflectors of light, making many telling points which found instant favor with the class.

"The branches," Miss Florence Dockstader. In novel and original manner the speaker treated this subject. How the plant must be nurtured gently, and constantly watered with

Christmas Gifts

Husbands, Sweethearts and Friends, is there any Christmas gift you can give your wife, your Best Girl or to any lady friend that will be more appreciated, practical and useful than an "up-to-date" Vacuum cleaner? They are now so low in price, they come within the reach of almost any purse, and are so perfect and effective in working they have become indispensable in every home. Housekeepers now realize that dust, dirt and disease germs are in our carpets, rugs and all through our homes 365 days in the year. And that a spasm of "Housecleaning" in spring and fall does not eliminate or destroy them. A perfect, easy working Vacuum cleaner chases them out of the house every day, or at least once a week, and your home becomes a "spotless one."

Read The Following Testimonial

Mr. S. L. Harrell, Mgr., Syracuse Vacuum Cleaner Co. Syracuse, N. Y., November 14, 1910

Dear Sir:—

We purchased the Regina—Peerless Vacuum Cleaner of you some time ago and find it to be all you recommended it to be, and even more, as it keeps our home "spotlessly clean," the rugs look bright, as when they came from the store, and there is absolutely no dust on the furniture, or stirring through the house.

We have never owned any article we prized so highly, because of its labor saving qualities, and my wife finds she can work it very effectively.

Signed, E. J. Wetherby Advertising Department, Syracuse Journal.

We have The Regina and The Peerless at $18.00 each—also The Queen at $15.00 each. These are hand worked, and work so easily that a young girl or an elderly woman may operate them effectively alone. We have The Regina at $110.00 each, The Nuway, $85.00 each, The Peerless, $65.00 each, electric worked. Either or all of the above we will confidently assert are the best Vacuum cleaners ever produced, and we have never before sold so many of them as during the past few weeks.

If we have no agency in your neighborhood please write, phone or call at our rooms and let us demonstrate the truth of these assertions.

SHOULD STATE PAY CAMPAIGN EXPENSES

Extraordinary Suggestion that State Absorb "Some Functions of Government Now Wastefully Performed By Voluntary Political Organizations."

Of particular interest and importance at this time, while expense statements of committees and candidates of both political parties are being scrutinized by the Association to Prevent Corrupt Practices at elections, is the suggestion made by State Superintendent of Insurance William H. Hotchkiss, that the cost of political campaigns be borne by the State. "Why," asks Mr. Hotchkiss, "should not government itself supply from its own funds the money needed by parties to this end?"

In 1908 there was expended by political committees, clubs and candidates in this State the sum of $2,220,212.42. This year's figures are not yet available.

Superintendent Hotchkiss' suggestion will undoubtedly meet with considerable discussion, editorial and otherwise. Among other things, he says: "If we are to escape the sinister influence of money in our governments, we must strike it in its most subtle form. Until the last half decade, our parties and our politics were becoming yearly more commercialized. The vote must be gotten out, workers paid, meetings had, interest aroused, enthusiasm accelerated, and all the machinery of campaigns set in motion. Hence, money. But, besides these so-called legitimate expenses, there were the blocks of fire, which must be bought, the dough-bag for secret distribution just before election day, and, worse, the committee's thousands absorbed by the party leech, each year, without an accounting. Therefore, contributions.

"Corporations, individuals, candidates—not voluntarily but usually at a hint from headquarters and often as an assessment arbitrarily fixed—have poured their money into the treasuries of political committees. Why? From patriotism? Hardly. From fear? Sometimes. But usually because the payer could not help it or wanted help from the payee. Who shall say how many nominations came out of the candidates' barrels? What credits, entitling to debt in grants and privileges, have been written on our parties' books? And where is the historian of our own times able, in appropriate words, to measure the cost to the people of this great land due to the repayment in laws and in franchises of the moneys thus contributed?"

"But here the call of the West is not needed. Corrupt practices acts, first enacted in 1905, have yearly become more stringent in New York. Contributions by corporations are substantially prohibited; those by candidates limited in amount, and somewhat complete publicity of the disbursements of political committees required. Again, so far, so good.

"But, why stop here? Party committees cannot accept contributions from corporations. Why should they from the officers of such corporations, from officeholders, from individual citizens? Is not the danger from the obligation thus created as great in one case as in the other; and, if public office means service, not 'job,' as in these latter days it does, should the servant pay the people a commission on the salary he draws for serving them?"

"In short, the logical ultimate of present tendencies is a prohibition on political contributions by all classes of our citizenship, including of officeholders and candidates. Thus, would the unholty use of money in political campaigns—and after—by those seeking place or laws or privileges be checked as far as legally possible. I commend the suggestion to your consideration."

"I commend another to you. Says the party man: 'This would destroy parties.' I think not. 'Without money, how could party work be done? The money should be supplied in another way. For what is a party in these days, save an organ of government? What is its only function? The management of political campaigns. WHY, THEN, SHOULD NOT GOVERNMENT, ITSELF, SUPPLY FROM ITS OWN FUNDS THE MONEY NEEDED BY PARTIES TO THIS END? In short, may not the last and best step in that peaceful revolution through which, led by our brethren of the West, we New Yorkers are passing, be the absorption by the State of some functions of government now wastefully performed by voluntary political organizations? I will not attempt to prophesy. But this I do say: That, like the legislative branch, the party system must change itself or lose its power. The people are bent on breaking up, forever, that endless chain."

Of course, Mark Twain's heirs got that $500,000, but he left the rest of us a pretty good legacy, too.

It is usually the 'optimist who spends money. The optimist loves the light--the pessimist the dark. Observe that the pessimist generally is a "tight wad."

Turn a searchlight upon the pessimist, who almost invariably poses as a "reformer"—and what a revelation you will get! The easiest method to win the optimist is the bright one. ## AN OFFICIAL SNUB

Rudely Flung at Genial Robert Louis Stevenson.

A CONSUL WITH A GROUCH.

The Author Called on the Newly Appointed Official at Apia to Pay His Respects and Was Shown the Door With Few Words and No Ceremony.

When Robert Louis Stevenson lived in Samoa he dressed as the others there did. Up at Vallima they all went about in their bare feet, except when expecting guests.

When Stevenson came into Apia he looked only half dressed. He always came down with a soft shirt on and generally white flannel trousers, sometimes with a red sash round the waist. On one occasion the genial author was rudely snubbed by a newly appointed British consul at Apia, one Colonel De Coetlogon. The story is told in "With Stevenson in Samoa," by H. J. Moore, the author.

One Sunday morning while Stevenson and myself, barefooted and in pajamas, were discussing the various local celebrities, my friend suddenly jumped up and announced that he had neglected a bounden duty. Here he had been in Apia for some considerable time and had not yet called on her Britannic Majesty's representative. Every Britisher of mark should attend to such a duty at the earliest possible moment! I must introduce him without one moment's further delay! "Come along, Moore," said he; "let's get it off our mind!"

I informed him that Colonel De Coetlogon was himself a new man in the place—he had been in Apia but a little while—and I had not yet met him. People who had met him had mostly declared him to be an exclusive, crusty old fellow, full of pomposity. I was therefore very loath to go until the new arrival had slumbered down somewhat. It was rumored that he had been for years governor of some great jail in Britain, and people remarked that he treated many of his callers as ticket of leave men who had come in to report.

But Stevenson, feeling very sure of his powers to charm this Gorgon, would take no warning, but shouted gaily: "Come on, Moore! I'll attend to this case. He'll welcome us all right." I pointed out his attire and his lack of shoes, and with a sigh, he compromised so far as to put on a clean shirt and a pair of trousers and shoes, but my best efforts would not induce him to wear a coat. In the rig he wore and under his little yachting cap he positively looked no more than twenty or twenty-five years of age. He bubbled with enthusiasm over everything new and strange that came within his view as we passed along the road to Matutu, where De Coetlogon lived. From the beginning I doubted if we would receive anything like an effusive welcome, and I took care to impart my fears to my friend, but he only laughed. Particularly did I point out that this was Sunday and that we should choose another day for our visit. He still laughed.

With pride and joy he threw open the consular gate and strode manfully across the lawn, I following close behind. A tall, soldierly person, with white mustaches and close cropped hair, was sitting peacefully on the veranda. He made no attempt to rise and welcome us. A whisky and soda had just then his rapt attention. We ascended the steps. The statue in the chair merely regarded us. We might as well have been a couple of distressed prisoners coming to pray for some amelioration.

Stevenson would have embraced this cold representative of his country's greatness, but the chill restrained him. "Good morning, sir."

A grunt. "Well, what do you want?" My name is Stevenson. I am well known in Britain by my works—in fact, I am a novelist. This is Mr. Moore.

"Well, what do you want?" No friendly hand was stretched out to greet us. We noted a face as hard as stone, as uncompromising and as unsympathetic as a brick wall. Stevenson stood there as one petrified; I was quite appalled. My friend had not counted on such a start. There was no seat or crutch in which he might momentarily locate to reconnoiter before he should attack again. The consul's brow was sad to look upon. He had not even risen civilly to hear us. "We have come, sir, to pay our respects."

"If you have any business and desire to see me I will listen to you on week days and in my office at the proper time. Good morning."

Stevenson quite lost the power of speech and looked appealingly at me. I cannot remember exactly what I said, but I know that I endeavored to depict to the consul the worth and honesty of my companion.

In return came this: "I don't care who you are—either of you! If you have any business at this consulate come and state it at the proper time."

Without more than a profound bow Stevenson turned and made his way out into the road again. I having preceded him. "By heavens, Moore, you were right! What a beast! What a d—d—well, I suppose he has a right to choose his own Sunday morning company. I had thought that I was one of the foremost men of letters of the day, but this fellow differs. What a situation for a man of my supposed eminence to find himself in! People will differ in their opinions, won't they?" And he burst out into a merry laugh.

WORDS OF APPRECIATION

Once in a great while a man finds time to extend a few words of appreciation to a newspaper for services rendered. The occurrence is so seldom as to make a marked man of the one so thoughtful, so far as the newspapers editor is concerned. The following letter from Attorney General O'Malley, who went down in the party wreck at the polls on November 8, is one of the rare bright spots: Albany, N. Y., November 17, 1910. Editor Times, Fulton, N. Y.

Dear Sir: I wish to thank you for the able support I received in your columns during the recent campaign. Under ordinary conditions the influence of such newspapers as the Fulton Times would have prevailed in my behalf, but unusual circumstances which we could not control brought us defeat.

Despite the result of the election, it will always be a pleasure for me to recall the hearty endorsement your newspaper gave my candidacy and the handsome vote which it assisted me to obtain under such unfavorable conditions.

Yours very truly,
G. R. O'Malley.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury.

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure, be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free. Sold by Druggists. Price, 75c per bottle. Take all's Family Pills for constipation.

A Boston woman says lack of babies causes divorces. An extraordinary argument. We should have thought, on the contrary, that the prevalence of divorce caused the shortage of infants.

¶ An oriental rug is a staple article; they are never out-of-date. It is true that the antiques have many admirers. The orientals we offer this week came to us by the straight and level path of legitimate merchandising. Importers of orientals placed several bales in our way with a price-proposition that no progressive merchant would turn down. To create activity in our rug department, these rugs, along with many of our own, will be offered at prices that will establish a new record for value-giving. This event is an extraordinary one which every admirer of oriental rugs should attend without delay.

N. B. Carpenter, a former resident of Fulton, died in Grand Rapids, Mich., on Thursday. He once conducted the cafe which was located in the basement of the J. C. O'Brien block. Mr. Carpenter is survived by three brothers, Frank, of this city, John of Volney and Charles of Grand Rapids, and two sisters, Mrs. Ophelia, Seelye of Ithaca and Elizabeth Carpenter, of Syracuse.

Word was received in this city last week of the death of Richard Esmond, at Roosevelt hospital, New York city, on November 7. The body was taken to Herkimer for interment on November 9. The deceased was a former well known resident of this city, owning and occupying the Ketcham property at the corner of Fourth and Ulster streets. He was educated in Fallay Seminary and soon after gained an enviable reputation as a patriot in the Civil War. He also gained fame during the late Cuban War.

TROLLEY WORK ABANDONED

Considerable Work Done Between Fulton and Oswego. Fulton Bridge Hold-up One Cause. Mud Too Deep To Accomplish Much.

The people of this city are disappointed to learn that the new trolley line between this city and Oswego will not be completed until some time next year. It had been predicted all along that the new road would be in running order and doing business by January 1st and judging from the hustling work of the contractors during the past summer it seemed as though this prediction would come true.

Now the news comes that I. M. Luddington & Sons Company, which has charge of the building of the track between this city and Oswego, is preparing to pick up its tools, put the plant into winter quarters and abandon work until the snow melts next Spring. What work has been done has been done with a rush and done well but there have been a number of delays which have prevented the completion of the work this present year.

There has been considerable delay in getting final papers in the cases of a number of people across whose lands a right of way had to be obtained and of course the contractors could do nothing until this end of the matter was cleaned up. It was only after the hardest kind of diplomatic work that the right of way down the West side of the river was obtained and it looked at times as though the West side route would have to be abandoned and the crossing made at Minetto and then the old trolley line followed into Oswego on the East side.

Another thing which has been holding up the completion of the line was the bridge difficulty in this city. The Beebe Syndicate has a franchise permitting them to cross the Oswego river over the lower bridge in this city, but they would prefer to build their own bridge and use it.

Another thing which has had much to do with the delay in the work has been the past five weeks of bad weather. It has either snowed or rained every day and the right of way where the Luddington company is trying to work has been a perfect sea of mud. It has been impossible to do rapid work under these conditions; it would appear that it would be of very little use to try and do more work this year so the contractors are now preparing to abandon the job until next Spring.

It had been earnestly hoped all this summer that the road would be completed so that the opening could be held on the first of the new year but there is no chance now. However, it is certain that the work will be rushed to completion just as soon as the weather will permit and that the road will be in running order very early next Spring.

THE BOHEMIAN GIRL

IN NEW FORM

Electrifyingly brilliant scenic effects, in three elaborately mounted sets, combined with solo and ensemble lyrics, beloved the world around, will delight audiences for one week except Friday night, beginning December 5, with matinee Wednesday, Friday and Saturday, when the big modern revival of the Paris version of "The Bohemian Girl" is brought to the Wieting Opera House, Syracuse, direct from a season at the new Boston Opera House.

The favorite opera of the Irish composer, Michael William Balfe, heretofore has been given only in its original form, but the present producers, Milton and Sargeant Aborn, have secured the revised amplified score and book prepared by Balfe and his librettist Bunn, for the Theatre Lyrique, Paris, in the festive season of the French second empire, sixteen years after the first London production. It is this new version which won for the composer the bestowal upon him by Napoleon of the Order of the Legion of Honor, that will be witnessed here.

The services of Mr. Edward Temple, formerly stage director of the New York Hippodrome, have been requisitioned by the Messrs. Aborn for this big operatic revival, and the wonderful ingenuity and mastery of stagecraft evinced by Mr. Temple on the mammoth stage of the Hippodrome have been eclipsed by his efforts for "The Bohemian Girl" Company. Not only have Messrs. Aborn provided a solo and ensemble cast of grand opera proportions and effectiveness, headed by the prima donna soprano, Blanche Duffield, recently soloist with Sousa's Band, Mr. Paul Victor, tenor, Miss Bertha Shalek, contralto, Mr. James Stevens, baritone, Mr. Charles Gallagher, basso, and a company of upwards of one hundred and fifty people, but a sumptuous scenic environment of colossal magnitude, as well.

The sale of seats begins Friday, December 2. Prices: Matinee, 25c to $1.00. Evening, 25c to $2.00. Mail orders to receive prompt attention should be addressed to manager F. P. Martin enclosing express or post office orders and stamped addressed envelope for return.

INDEPENDENT TELEPHONE CO. MEETS

Hold Annual Meeting and Elect Officers. Resolved Not to Pay Any Officer a Salary. M. S. Powell Removed From Management. L. R. Owens Succeeds Him.

The stockholders of the Independent Telephone Company held their annual meeting in the Company's building on Monday and elected directors for the ensuing year as follows: Messrs. H. L. Paddock, F. A. Gage, J. R. Sullivan, Charles Currier, A. W. Wiltzie, E. Quirk and Dr. C. R. Lee of this city; Hon. T. C. Sweet, Phoenix; Attorney A. H. Cowie, Syracuse. The directors met and elected the following officers, President, H. L. Paddock; vice president, C. R. Lee; secretary, M. S. Powell; treasurer, A. W. Wiltzie.

A resolution was adopted to the effect that neither of the officers should draw salary.

Just at this point considerable discussion was created by a resolution offered by E. Quirk to the effect that on and after December 1, 1910, the services of Manager M. S. Powell should be dispensed with and his salary of $1,500 per year be thus saved to the company, Superintendent L. R. Owens having been acting manager for some time past. Mr. Powell and his friends put up stubborn opposition to the proposed change but it was passed by a majority vote of the stockholders.

Mr. L. R. Owens was elected manager and cashier, and Miss Lena Church assistant cashier, at the adjourned meeting held on Monday afternoon.

Mr. Owens came to Fulton when the new company first organized and he has been at his post constantly ever since. He has been courteous and patient with the patrons of the company; never permitting personal feelings to interfere with his conduct; he has been just and fair in all his dealing with employers, employees and clients, to the end that his promotion has given satisfaction and on every side he is receiving congratulations and good wishes. The Times congratulates the Independent Telephone company and their patrons upon at last having a resident manager with an eye single to efficiency of the service.

CORRESPONDENCE

The following communication from the pen of Capt. O. J. Jennings, now of Claremont, Va., will be read with interest by his former friends here.

Editor Times: Claremont is all right. To begin with its population consists in the main of northern people who came here some years ago and established a colony, since which time it has steadily grown until now it is a delightful village of about seven hundred inhabitants and in the main of sterling worth. The village is located on the south bank of the James river equidistant between Norfolk and Richmond, Va. The town is built on a beautiful bluff 100 feet above high tide; the James river is two miles wide at this point and vessels drawing twenty-five feet of water can load here. It has double daily lines of steam boats plying between Richmond, Norfolk and Petersburg. The Southern Railway has a branch running to Claremont making it easy of access either by water or land. Its specialties are good climate, good neighbors and good lands surrounding it. The products of the soil are pea nuts, corn, sweet and white potatoes. The products of the river at this season of the year are cat fish and musk rats. A little later on wild duck and geese will be in evidence by the thousands. The forests abound in game such as deer, wild turkey and varmints (so called by darkies) making it an ideal place for those seeking sport in the surrounding forests. "Where in early days Powhatan and his braves roamed in pursuit of game." Claremont is twelve miles from historic Jamestown where Pocahontas first met and may be took a sly glance at Capt. John Smith. The settlers here are from Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin and New York state. It is so much Americanized that it truly seems a part of the United States. The society here is good but to some extent in crusts or grades, to wit:

The white gal ride in an automobile The yellow gal rides just the same; But the black gal rides in an old street car.

But she's ridin' jus the same.

The white gal smells like a sweet cake of soap.

The yellow gal she smells jus the same;

But the black gal smells like an old billy goat.

But she's smellin' jus the same.

For those seeking health in a milder climate than Oswego county has, I don't know of a more desirable locality than Claremont. The main hotel, the Green House Inn, is kept by your former townspeople, the Kimballs, who are always glad to welcome the good people of Oswego County. O. J. Jennings.

Oswego, Nov. 26.—John Dennis today gave formal announcement of his candidacy for Sheriff, Mr. Dennis has been connected with the office for the last nine or ten years and there is no man who has held the position of Under Sheriff that has made a better record. Mr. Dennis came into the office with the late Albert Warren and served as Under Sheriff with the latter, also with Sheriff Cook and now with Sheriff Taft. He was a candidate for the nomination against Sheriff Taft and went into the convention with twenty-eight delegates behind him. At that time Mr. Dennis got into the contest late and that mitigated against him. He says that that will not be the case this time. In announcing himself now he expects that all his friends will be governed accordingly.

Oberlin, Ohio, November 19, 1910

Editor Times: It pains me to write of the death of Richard Esmond in New York city on November 7, aged

65. He was a Fulton boy who did honor to the home of his youth. I do not know his full army history, but I believe that he earned rapid promotion for bravery in the Civil

His daughter, Mrs. Woolworth, of Denver, Col., and other relatives were present and the burial was at Herkimer, N. Y.

It seems to me that Esmond acted part of the time in the Civil war as staff officer for two or three prominent Generals and perhaps some reader of the Times can give further information as to his military career. He was very dear to me.

SKUNK PELTS VALUABLE

Twenty-eight Sold in the Local Market for $65.00.

Sixty-five dollars for twenty-eight skunk pelts was the price paid by N. C. White. Some of the pelts were of exceptional size and quality and black. These brought $4 each. Others not so valuable brought fifty cents. One of the latter was nearly white with a strip of black on the belly. There is a lot of spare money in pelts for the boys on the farm this year. Furs of this kind have never been in greater demand. Muskrat are plentiful this Fall, and the young ones have now attained their full growth, but the exceptionally large ones are those that bring the money. —Oswego Times.

Tom, Tom the piper's son,
Thought to steal another one,
But when, with bacon 40 cents,
He thought upon the consequence,
And what he probably would get
In case he landed in the net,
The lawyers he would have to hire
To save him from the butcher's ire.
The money Cudaky would spend
To push it to the bitter end,
The merciless concern of Swift
To see he was not set adrift,
The sun that Armour, if he fled,
Would offer for him live or dead,
And how the unforgiving lust
For vengeance would move the trust
To make example of him lest
Some other piper's son protest Against pork chops at thirty flat,
And pickled pigs' feet selling at Six-bits a dozen, souce a bit,
And sausage even close to it—
When Tom considered it, in brief,
And also how much more a thief
He would be this time than before,
He wisely passed the butcher's door,
Rejoiced that self had stood the test,
And went on hoping for the best.

POPE PIUS X.

Reports From Rome State
He is in Bad Health.

Our Mr. Morgan will revert
To hanging up his spacious shirt,
And tying up the tail to pot
Whatever Santa Claus has got.
O woe is us! How tough it is To hang our stockings under his!
But faith is hope, and hope is trust,
And some fine day the tail will bust.

As many things have bust before,
And bingo, on the parlor floor
Will go the Christmas odds and ends
With which his catch-'em-all distends.
The costly presents and the rare,
And while we all grab here and there
For each his share of it the mirth
Of Santa Claus will fill the earth.

Those merry peals which rouse the dead will wake the echoes overhead, and laughter flavored with reproach reverberate around the roof. He never meant we should pervert the day with hanging up a shirt, nor ever thought, by any chance, of filling Rockefeller's pants.

A sockful, each is all there is, and woe to him who takes for his a greater portion, hook or crook, than each originally took. For every person that descends to tying pants around the ends, and closing shirts around the base there is a reckoning to face.

The laws of Santa Claus are good, and in the end are what we would desire they were—that is to say that this is everybody's day. A single sock above the fire is all a body should require, and there before the growing log nobody keen to be the hog.

In such a spirit was it said that all days are to get ahead except this one, which was designed for everyone to get behind. The merry holidays will come, and Santa, sliding

And in the glad and new-born year
We'll all swear off again.

Rural Parcels Post

It is sincerely hoped that the recommendation of Postmaster General Hitchcock to Congress will be enacted into law and that the citizens of the Republic will soon be permitted to enjoy the privilege of a parcels post. This will follow, in due sequence, the organization of the postal savings banks, now in an experimental stage, but which cannot fail to become popular with a certain class of our residents, especially those from Italy and Southern Europe. It will also encourage economy and thrift among our own people who do not now patronize savings institutions.

To illustrate the incongruities that exist in the parcel post service between this country and many of the foreign governments, it should only be necessary to state that any individual entering the post office in this city with two parcels each weighing 4 pounds, can send one parcel to New York for 64 cents, while for the other parcel, which is addressed to some one in a foreign land and goes via New York, he will have to pay but 48 cents, for the reason that the rate to foreign countries is 12 cents a pound, while the rate to our own American people is 16 cents a pound. Should the packages weigh 4 1/2 pounds each, the one addressed to the friend in New York would have to be refused by the local postmaster, while the one addressed to the person in the foreign land, and which would be accepted, would be forwarded to New York and then on to its destination. The parcel to the foreign country would be received in most instances even if it weighed 11 pounds, and forwarded to any one of the twenty two foreign countries in the postal union.

Two interests have opposed the extension of parcel post in this country—the express companies and the country retail merchants. The latter fear that the mail-order houses will derive a benefit to their own disadvantage.

Postmaster General Hitchcock has recommended the establishment of a parcel post on rural routes which will meet the objections of the small storekeepers and retail merchants. This promises to be a boon to our rural population and to the storekeeper, as the latter can receive his orders by mail or telephone and dispatch the desired merchandise by the rural carrier. The farmer will be saved from hitching up his horse and losing the time he needs for planting or harvesting his crops, and it will enable the storekeeper to increase his sales and meet the requirements of modern trade. If the proposition becomes a law it will cost 2 cents a pound for the mail-order house to send parcels to the rural delivery patron from any city post office, while for delivery from the distributing office of the rural route, or if mailed by a patron of any rural route for delivery to a patron on the same route, or at the distributing post office of said route, the charge will be but 5 cents for the first pound and 2 cents for each additional pound up to 11 pounds, or 25 cents for a package weighing 11 pounds. The object now is to procure authority from Congress to get a decrease that will meet the rates charged for parcels sent by post to other countries. In other words, a reduction of 4 cents a pound, and an increase in weight which will compare in some measure to that which has been adopted by other highly civilized nations. An 11-pound limit will, however, be far from the maximum established by France, which is 22 pounds, Germany, 110 pounds, and Belgium, 132 pounds.

As a prelude to the inauguration of such a beneficent measure, Mr. Hitchcock desires to obtain definite information as to the nature and volume of the business to be handled. He accordingly will urge that in connection with the experiment on rural routes a further inquiry be authorized by Congress in order that the department may be in a better position to develop the system on conservative lines. He will recommend that an appropriation for the inquiry be granted at the coming session.

BOXING BOUTS ARRANGED

The Uncas Athletic club of the Improved Order of Red Men of this city, through their committee, Messrs. William Brown, E. M. Austin, W. J. Sullivan, George Nelligan, Michael Reynolds, P. Mooney, F. E. Brown and Bernie Nealis have arranged for a boxing contest to be held in their club rooms in Red Men's Hall on West Broadway on December 5. This will be the first event in a series to be given this winter.

Last year similar events were enjoyed by the club and its members, giving the cue that this year the same sport would be enjoyed by the members and their friends if the privilege was accorded them of seeing some fast hitting.

TALKED OF BEFORE

Oswego, Nov. 26.—Members of the Department of Charity are going to urge upon the Board of Supervisors that a contract be made with Onondaga county penitentiary relative to sending those convicted of certain offenses to that institution. The members of the department say that something must be done to put a stop to the wholesale abandonment by heads of families, foreigners who come to the city for a few months, work and skip out, leaving their wives and little ones destitute and for the city to support. When the husband is arrested he usually takes kindly to the jail sentence, knowing full well that the wife and children will be cared for and that he will be out of the chilling blasts until Spring has come again. There is some work at the jail, but it is a summer resort compared with conditions found by the average offender at the Onondaga penitentiary. A ill-aided stepping that institution, and it is believed by President Buck and the other members of the department that it is the fear of the "pen" that strikes terror to the heart of the average evildoer as no other institution will. Therefore they want the Supervisors to make a contract for keeping prisoners there, and that will probably be one of the principal measures of the coming session. At present the County pays $2.36 a week for boarding prisoners at the county jails, the county furnishing all the supplies and coal for that purpose excepting provisions.

The records at the charity office show that on an average 150 families a year are deserted by their heads and the number is growing. Many who have come here to work on the Barge canal and other public works think nothing of slipping away from their families when they are through with the job, knowing that if the family is not sent on to them that they will not be permitted to suffer. Within a few days it cost the department $70 to get rid of a family thus landed on the city for support. It is said at the Charity office that there are several thousands of dollars spent annually in caring for these cases. With a contract with the penitentiary it would be an easy matter to send this class of offenders there and it is believed that the practice would then come to an end, at least so far as this city is concerned.

"Hereafter the Chicago police are to fire marked bullets when they charge obstreperous mobs." Presumably in order to improve their marks.

WIETING OPERA HOUSE

A Paris friend of Gustav Mahler gives an interesting pen picture of the famous conductor who is to be heard at the Wieting Opera House, Syracuse, Friday evening, December 9th, with New York's famous Orchestra, the Philharmonic Society. The writer refers to Mahler as the "one musician since the death of Beethoven who has dared to follow in the pathway hewn by the Ninth Symphony to liberty of form and expression in its noblest and most elevating influence."

Mr. Mahler is described as rather a small man, delicate looking and extremely nervous, a long, clean-shaven face, the head high in the center and surmounted with very black hair, an extraordinary forehead, behind large round spectacles gleam brilliantly sharp, dark eyes, which give the impression of inflexible will, and this is strengthened by a large prominent nose. The mouth, fine almost to effeminacy frequently breaks into a smile of childlike frankness and great kindness, forming a striking contrast to the austerity of the upper portion, which is certain to be welcomed by a crowd of admirers.

Local music lovers are keenly alive to the importance of the forthcoming engagement, and Mr. Mahler is certain to be welcomed by a crowded house. No orchestral organization in the country enjoys a greater reputation. But few cities will be included in the present tour which is under the direction of Loudon Chariton.

A program of unusual excellence, one that will appeal to all classes of concert-goers, is promised and it will show the famous orchestra at its best.

Mail orders addressed to F. P. Martin, with express or post office orders and stamped envelopes, will receive prompt attention.

Prices for this engagement will be: Prices for this engagement will be 75 cents, $1.00, $1.50, $2.00, and $2.50.

JUDGE MERRILL ISSUES ORDER

Judge Merrill at the Special Term of Supreme Court last week announced that unless the Board of Supervisors at their coming session authorized the placing of a new ventilating system in the Courthouse, he would make an order at the January term directing the work to be done. The matter was called to the attention of Judge Merrill by Sheriff Taft, H. R. Carrier and E. B. Powell, representing the Bar Association, who pointed out to Judge Merrill the necessity of better air in the court house.

Judge Merrill said that the wretched conditions had been forcefully called to his attention during the terms of court he has held here, but he said he would rather have the Supervisors take care of the work and he would do nothing until he saw whether or not they would. If they do not, he stated, then he would take the matter in his own hands and see that the work was done.

An order was signed cancelling the lib pendens in the case of Edna J. Sharp vs. Dora F. Watson, a case from Fulton.

AGAINST SENSATIONAL SERMONS

Decree by the Pope Announced by Bishop Ludden—Oratory has no Place in Catholic Church

Sensational sermons and discourses upon popular subjects delivered by priests from the pulpit of the Catholic church have been denounced by Pope Pius X, according to an announcement made by Rt. Rev. P. A. Ludden, bishop of the diocese of Syracuse.

"The holy father believes," said Bishop Ludden, "that oratory has no place in the Catholic church. He is urging that the priests confine their sermons to the gospels and epistles set aside for the day, rather than the discussion of popular topics."

"To the priests and professors in Rome the Pope has said that instead of such procedure they should go into the streets among the poor and teach the catechism to the children. His wishes in that matter, as in all others, are laid down for our priests at the various conferences here."

This latest reform document is a part of the famous motu proprio, and the second division of it which has recently been translated shows Pius X still bent on the destruction of novelty in the church. In his introduction the Pope declares: "The zeal of the bishops in providing for the preaching of the divine word has not produced its proper fruit," and the failure has not been due to the "negligence of the hearers but to the vanity of preachers whose words are the words of men rather than of God."

The proper subjects for preaching Pope Pius says, are the apostles' creed, the ten commandments, the precepts of the church, the sacraments, the virtues and vices, the duties of one's state of life, the four last things and the other eternal truths of the same kind.

"But today the ministers of the divine word only too often pay but small attention to this rich and important mine of subjects. They neglect it and almost reject it as something useless and superannuated. Knowing well, as they do, that the subjects we have just enumerated are little calculated to win popular applause, for which they are so eager and, seeking their own interests and not those of Jesus Christ, they thrust aside these topics during Lent and the most solemn season of the year."

A REMINISCENCE

Hon. A. S. Roe of Worcester, Mass., served in the Civil War in the Ninth Heavy Artillery. In 1866 he was one of the foremost students in Faler Seminary, ranking along with D. P. Morehouse, B. S. McKinstry, Hon. Theodore Hancock, A. J. and Arthur Hawks. I attended school there that term with John Edwards and Samuel Case of South Hannibal. The former is now a resident of Michigan and the latter of California. Comrade Roe had a habit of taking a morning walk and studying as he walked. He visits his father occasionally and was here a short time ago and delivered an address before Schenck Post. He writes that he is clipping my war articles for his scrap book. His father, Rev. A. S. Roe, I think has reached his 87th year. He formerly preached at South Hannibal and stopped with us and I used to carry him to his Grandby appointment. He was considered a good sermonizer.

Man Missing For 55 Years Dies in Logansport, Ind.

Utica, Nov. 17.—The announcement of the death in Logansport, Ind., of John Henry Hobart Ruse has solved a mystery which stirred Utica fifty years ago. Mr. Ruse, who was an instructor in the High school here in 1855, officiated as Santa Claus at a Christmas entertainment that year, left the gathering and disappeared. As he had gone to California in 1894, during the gold fever, it was supposed that he had returned to the West.

Nothing was ever heard from him, and his family, prominent people of this city, long ago gave him up for dead. It is now learned that he had been teaching school in Logansport for half a century.

Surviving relatives in Utica believe that his strange action was due to a misunderstanding with a young woman to whom he was engaged.

Group is most prevalent during the dry cold weather of the early winter months. Parents of young children should be prepared for it. All that is needed is a bottle of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. Many mothers are never without it in their homes and it has never disappointed them. Sold by all dealers.

CENTRAL MAY SUE LOCKWOOD

Brought Him Back 21 Pigs When He Shipped Seven

"Talk about your tough luck," said ex-Supervisor Charlie Lockwood, of Scriba, "it's coming in bunches to me." And thereby hangs a tale—yes, fourteen of them.

A few weeks ago Mr. Lockwood, who is a breeder of blooded cattle and high grade hogs, sent seven classy pigs down to the Waterloo fair for exhibition purposes. When live stock is sent to fairs the railroad companies ship it back from the point where it is exhibited free of charge.

But while Mr. Lockwood's pigs were in Waterloo, fourteen little ones came to life, and when the New York Central agent there billed the animals back he found that while seven had come there were twenty-one being returned. He couldn't see this at all and at once came to the conclusion that somebody was trying to defraud the road. So he shipped the seven back free and charged freight for the fourteen little piggies.

When the happy family arrived Mr. Lockwood took possession of it and took it out to his farm. A day or two later a bill came on for $9.50 for the transportation of fourteen pigs from Waterloo to this city.

Mr. Lockwood, however, by that time had the pigs, and now he says he won't pay. He would like to see the company sue, making this a test case, for, as he remarked, he doesn't believe anything just like this one has ever been decided by the courts. That the little pigs were "milled in transit" will be his defense, he says.

BOLD BURGLAR ESCAPES

Wm. C. Morgan Jewelry Store Entered at 10 P. M. Thief Cuts Pane of Glass and Unlocks Window. Escapes with $150 Worth of Goods. Identity of Burglar Suspected.

The community was electrified on Friday morning to learn that a burglary which for boldness exceeds any previous enactment in this city, had taken place in the Wm. C. Morgan Jewelry store in Cayuga street on Thursday evening at 9:30 o'clock, as the street was brightly lighted and people passing the store windows all the time. But for the timely discovery of Mr. D. L. Lipsky, who was passing the store at that hour, noticed someone inside and rapping on the window started the thief, it is probable that Mr. Morgan would have been compelled to replace his Holiday selection of choice articles on short notice.

Before retiring for the night Mr. Lipsky felt that he would enjoy a short walk in the air, so left his home and sauntered down Cayuga street. As he glanced in the Morgan window in passing, he saw a tall, thin man with soft hat, standing by a case in the rear of the store. Mr. Lipsky believing it to be one of the clerks catching up delayed work, rapped on the window and ask what was doing, and then continued his walk. As he reached the alley way east of the store a man passed him running, and Mr. Lipsky immediately saw that it was the man he had noticed in the Morgan store. John Pomphret was the only man in sight at the moment and Mr. Lipsky called to him to know who the sprinter was, but Mr. Pomphret did not know him. Mr. Lipsky then telephoned the police station and Mr. Pomphret investigated the rear of the store and found the screen cut, and the window pane cut with a diamond and broken so that the latch could be reached. Patrolman Dyer and a posse of citizens started at once in pursuit of the thief and traced him through alleyways until they lost the scent in First street, the supposition being that he took a south bound trolley at that time.

Mr. Morgan was out of town for the night and upon his return in the morning he found that his loss would only total up a matter of $150, four watches, five bracelets and a few small articles being the extent of the loss sustained. Mr. Morgan is insured in the Alliance which undertakes to capture the thief, pays $100 for his arrest but does not reimburse the owner for any loss.

Many are of the opinion that the work was done by an expert but others believe the work to have been done by an amateur. The police are inclined to the opinion that the robber was a fellow, who in company with a pal, had been in Fulton for a few days previous to the robbery but has not been seen since.

BUS SERVICE TO ALL SECTIONS

Mr. Tom O'Brien has purchased the bus and equipment from Syracuse parties and he will go to any section of the city for passengers or baggage. He will also package on either side of the river and all charges will be very reasonable.

Mr. O'Brien solicits your patronage and has made arrangements with the management of the Clark House, phone 15, so that all that is necessary is to call up that number and leave your order, stating time and address. He will do the rest. This service will be a great convenience for residents and Mr. O'Brien deserves and will undoubtedly receive a generous share of business.

NEW PURCHASING AGENT

A further indication of the civil service policy of the present management of the Lackawanna Railroad, is given in the circular issued by M. C. C. Hubbell, Purchasing Agent, and approved by Mr. Truesdale, President, of the promotion of Mr. H. F. Lowther to become Assistant Purchasing Agent, effective December 1, 1910.

During the time Mr. Lowther has been connected with the Lackawanna, he has made a splendid record and is qualified both by training and ability to assume the duties of his new position.

TAFT'S MESSAGE UP TO CONGRESS

President Breaks Record For Length of Document.

DEFENDS PAYNE TARIFF ACT

Deals With Panama Canal, Postal Savings Bank, Parcel Post and Conservation—Asks For Raise of Judicial Salaries—Recommendation For Filling Honor For Peary.

Washington, Dec. 6.—The president sent the following message to congress today:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

During the past year the foreign relations of the United States have continued upon a basis of friendship and good understanding.

The year has been notable as witnessing the pacific settlement of two important international controversies before the permanent court of The Hague.

The arbitration of the fisheries disputes between the United States and Great Britain, which has been the source of nearly continuous diplomatic correspondence since the fisheries convention of 1818, has given an award which is satisfactory to both parties.

Peace Commission.

Appreciating these enlightened tendencies of modern times, the congress at its last session passed a law providing for the appointment of a commission of five members to be appointed by the president of the United States to consider the expediency of utilizing existing international agencies for the purpose of limiting the armaments of the nations of the world by international agreement and of constituting the combined navies of the world an international force for the preservation of universal peace and to consider and report upon any other means for diminishing the expenditures of government for military purposes and to lessen the probabilities of war.

The work of the International Fisheries commission appointed in 1908, under the treaty of April 11, 1908, between Great Britain and the United States, has resulted in the formulation and recommendation of uniform regulations governing the fisheries of the boundary waters of Canada and the United States for the purpose of protecting and increasing the supply of food fish in such waters.

The Far East.

The center of interest in far eastern affairs during the past year has again been China.

It is gratifying to note that the negotiations for a loan to the Chinese government for the construction of the trunk railway lines from Hankow southward to Canton and westward through the Yangtze valley, known as the Hukwang loan, were concluded by the representatives of the various financial groups in May last and the results approved by their respective governments.

Tariff Negotiations.

The new tariff law in section 2 respecting the maximum and minimum tariffs of the United States, which provisions came into effect on April 1, 1910, imposed upon the president the responsibility of determining prior to that date whether or not any undue discrimination existed against the United States and its products in any country of the world with which we sustained commercial relations.

The policy of broader and closer trade relations with the Dominion of Canada, which was initiated in the adjustment of the maximum and minimum provisions of the tariff act of August, 1909, has proved mutually beneficial. It justifies further efforts for the readjustment of the commercial relations of the two countries so that their commerce may follow the channels natural to contiguous countries and be commensurate with the steady expansion of trade and industry on both sides of the boundary line.

The Department of State.

All tariff negotiations, so vital to our commerce and industry, and the duty of jealously guarding the equitable and just treatment of our products, capital and industry abroad devolve upon the department of state.

The efforts of that department to secure for citizens of the United States equal opportunities in the markets of the world and to expand American commerce have been most successful. The volume of business obtained in new fields of competition and upon new lines is already very great, and congress is urged to continue to support the department of state in its endeavors for further trade expansion.

An instrumentality indispensable to the unhampered and natural development of American commerce is merchant marine. All maritime and commercial nations recognize the importance of this factor. The greatest commercial nations, our competitors, jealously foster their merchant marine.

I alluded to this most important subject in my last annual message. It has often been before you, and I need not recapitulate the reasons for its recommendation. Unless prompt action be taken the completion of the Panama canal will find this the only great commercial nation unable to avail in international maritime business of this great contribution to the means of the world's commercial intercourse.

For many reasons I cannot too strongly urge upon the congress the passage of a measure by mail subsidy or other subvention adequate to guarantee the establishment and rapid development of an American merchant marine, the restoration of the American flag to its ancient place upon the seas.

Estimates For Next Year's Expenses.

The final estimates for the year ending June 30, 1912, as they have been sent to the treasury on Nov. 23 of this year for the ordinary expenses of the government, including those for public buildings, rivers and harbors and the navy building program, amount to $630,494,013.12. This is $52,964,887.36 less than the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911. It is $16,883,153.44 less than the total estimates, including supplemental estimates, submitted to congress by the treasury for the year 1911, and is $5,574,659.39 less than the original estimates submitted by the treasury for 1911.

These figures do not include the appropriations for the Panama canal, the policy in respect to which ought to be and is to spend as much each year as can be economically and effectively expended in order to complete the canal as promptly as possible, and therefore the ordinary motive for cutting down the expense of the government does not apply to appropriations for this purpose. It will be noted that the estimates for the Panama canal for the ensuing year are more than $50,000,000, an increase of $20,000,000 over the amount appropriated for this year, a difference due to the fact that the estimates for 1912 include some

A SANTA CLAUS SONG

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

I'm as happy as a bird,
Santa Claus,
For I'm sure that you have heard,
Santa Claus,
How I'm hoping every day
That you're really on your way
And that soon we'll hear your sleigh,
Santa Claus!

Oh, the dolls, Santa Claus!
Oh, the toys, Santa Claus!
Oh, the happy, happy, happy girls and boys!

Oh, how merry we'll sing
When we hear your sleigh bells ring,
For we love like everything,
Santa Claus!

Oh, I hear your bells ringing,
Santa Claus!
I scarce can keep from singing,
Santa Claus!
Oh, such gladness and such joy
To each little girl and boy
Comes when you are drawing nigh,
Santa Claus!

Oh, the dolls, Santa Claus!
Oh, the toys, Santa Claus!
Oh, the happy, happy, happy girls and boys!

Oh, how merry we'll sing
When we hear your sleigh bells ring,
For we love like everything,
Santa Claus!

CITY OF FULTON, ss:

William MacNamara, City Clerk.
Approved this 30th day of November, 1910.

J. H. Connors, Mayor.

Christmas in the Colonies.
Tells the story of Christmas in the colonies, and the palm of the best of the lovely old Christmas in an island over seas.
And a meditative maiden of the kind called Philippine.
Sat and gazed with pensive visage on the sultry winter scene.

Well she knew that on the morrow all her folks would celebrate.
Place upon the table, the parlor, hang their anklets over the grate.
On the beamed up Christmas table, groaning with its load, there's a he appetizing bird's nest truffles and banana fricassée.

"Let me see," she murmured softly: "father 'll get his string of beads, blue and yellow. I am certain they're the very thing he needs.
For his old eyes looked quite shocking, though he never seemed to care, and his new set's quite the sweetest thing a gentleman can wear."

"And for mamma there's the rose ring that I bought on Thursday week. With the handsome whitebone stickpin for insertion in the cheek, and little brother's boomerang! He'll be immensely pleased.
That or a bamboo jumping jack are the things for which he's teased."

"And as for me, I only hope they've got the things I need—
Just one or two nice costumes made of genuine coral bead.
A toe ring would be lovely, and a piece of copper wire
To wear around the instep make up all that I desire."

"Except, of course, some other things that every girl receives.
Such as various kinds of dresses made of nicely ripened leaves.
For surely," said the maiden as she smiled a scornful smile.
"I'm not like those American girls who always think of style."
—Chicago Record-Herald.

MARVELOUS DISCOVERIES

mark the wonderful progress of the age. Air flights on heavy machines, telegrams without wires, terrible war inventions to kill men, and that wonder of wonders, Dr. King's New Discovery—to save life when threatened by coughs, colds, la grippe, asthma, croup, bronchitis, hemorrhages, hay fever and whooping cough or lung trouble. For all bronchial affections it has no equal. It relieves instantly. Its the surest cure. James M. Black of Asheville, N. C., R. R. No. 4, writes it cured him of an obstinate cough after all other remedies failed. 50c. and $1.00. A trial bottle free. Guaranteed by the Red Cross Pharmacy.

If President Taft is looking for a suitable receiver for the Republic of Panama, he would doubtless find any one of the Guggenheim boys in a receptive frame of mind.

PRINTING MILLION CHRISTMAS SEALS A DAY

Red Cross Has Sent Out 60,000,000 Stickers —Warns Against Misuse of Stickers

Announcement comes from the headquarters of the American National Red Cross that Christmas Seals are being printed at the rate of a million a day and that already over 60,000,000 have been given out to agents in all parts of the United States. The demand for these holiday seals is greater this year than ever before.

A the same time the Red Cross issues a warning calling attention of all users of Christmas Seals to the ruling of the Post-office Department that these stickers must be placed on the backs of letters and packages. To avoid the possibility of the misuse of holiday seals, warning cards are being posted in every booth where Red Cross Seals are sold, telling that the stickers are not good for postage and must be used only as seals.

Already several million seals have been sold to large manufacturing concerns and other business houses in all parts of the United States, and orders are coming in hourly. The outlook for selling 100,000,000 seals and thereby making good the slogan of the campaign, "A Million for Tuberculosis," are very bright.

FARMER'S INSTITUTE

Special round-trip tickets are offered by the New York Central Railroad to the Farmers' Institutes at Central Square, Parish, Pulaski, Williamstown, Lacona, Mexico and Hannibal from December 8 to 13. They will be on sale at stations along the company's lines on the day of the opening of the institute, and will be good returning up to and including the last day of the meeting for which the ticket is sold.

Success in any business depends largely on a knowledge of its underlying principles and familiarity with the details of its management, and this especially true of farming. The farmer must know something of his soil, to what it is adapted and how it may be managed to yield the largest crops without loss in fertility; he must know something of dairy methods and of plant breeding. Through the Farmers' Institutes such instruction is provided by the Department of Agriculture as will surely be a help to the landowner in making a financial success of his undertaking.

Institutes will be held in Oswego County as follows: Palermo, December 7; Central Square, December 7; Parish, December 8; Pulaski, December 8; Williamstown, December 9; Lacona, December 9-10; Mexico, December 12; South West Oswego, December 13; Hannibal, December 13.

A WOMAN'S GREAT IDEA

is how to make herself attractive. But, without health, it is hard for her to be lovely in face, form or temper. A weak, sickly woman will be nervous and irritable. Constipation and kidney poisons show in pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. But Electric Bitters always prove a god-send to women who want health, beauty and friends. They regulate Stomach, Liver and Kidneys, purify the blood, give strong nerves, bright eyes, pure breath, smooth, velvety skin, lovely complexion, good health. Try them. 50c. at the Red Cross Pharmacy.

The Baltimore woman "who shot a burglar" with her eyes closed had the presence of mind, probably to recollect that she couldn't hit what she looked at.

PROVOCATION ENOUGH

A deaf old gentleman dined with a family where grace was always said. When the guests were seated the host bowed his head and began to repeat the accustomed verse in a subdued, reverent tone.

"Eh? What's that?" demanded the deaf old gentleman who sat beside him.

The host smiled patiently and began again, in a louder, more deprecatory voice.

"Speak a little louder, I don't catch what you say," the old gentleman persisted.

A low ripple of laughter went round the table. The host, his face crimson with embarrassment, raised his voice and repeated the verse. The deaf old gentleman did his best to hear, but failed. He placed his hand upon his host's arm.

"What did you say?" he demanded, irritably.

The host cast him an angry glance. "D—n it, I'm saying grace," he snapped.—Harper's Weekly.

KEPT NAMES OF DEAD IN PRISON OF HORRORS

Hartford, Conn., Nov. 30.—Word was received by State Senator Francis Atwater of Meriden, today of the death of his brother, Dorrance Atwater in San Francisco, where he has been living recently with his wife, who was a princess on the island of Tahiti in the South Sea.

Dorrance Atwater was widely known as the man who successfully completed and brought away with him from Andersonville Prison, during the Civil War, the secret record of deaths of federal prisoners of war in the military prison of horrors.

Mr. Atwater who was born in Connecticut in 1845 and enlisted at the age of 16 in the First Squadron, Connecticut Volunteer Cavalry, was an officer of the noted Harris Light Cavalry of New York when he was made a prisoner in February, 1864, and sent to Andersonville where he was made a clerk.

Suspecting that the lists sent out were being altered before reaching the United States government he made a duplicate record, containing 13,000 names, which he placed in the lining of his coat when he was sent to the parole camp at Annapolis in 1865.

Less than 50 per cent. of the names of the soldiers who succumbed to the horrors of Andersonville reached the federal government through official channels.

The greatest danger from influenza is of its resulting in pneumonia. This can be obviated by using Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, as it not only cures influenza, but counteracts any tendency of the disease towards pneumonia. Sold by all dealers.

Aviation will soon be dropped as a front-page feature and turned over to the sporting editor.

WHAT OUR COURTS COST

Court Clerk Coulter Compiles His Annual Statement

Court Clerk L. A. Coulter has completed the compilation of a table showing that the expenses of the courts in this county during the year 1910 were $13,249.63. It cost $14,026.74 for the trial terms of Supreme Court; $9,150 for the Special Terms and $4,132.39 for County Court. The total fines collected were $760, paid by the following: Camillo Pupperi, assault, third degree, $50; James Decker, assault, third degree, $100; Elam Van Sickle, common gambler, $200; Homer Krum, selling liquor on Sunday, $200; Frank Makoski, assault, third degree, $50; Earl Willie, selling liquor on Sunday, $75; and Michael Carey, selling liquor on Sunday, $75.

OSWEGO GOT CARS

Albany, N. Y.—C. H. Ewings, Superintendent of freight transportation for the New York Central, at the hearing on the application of the Buffalo, Rochester and Eastern railroad for a franchise, denied the charges of delay in freight service.

Ewing testified that during the busy month of October in the fruit belt West of Oswego and Rochester 4,155 refrigerators, fruit and vegetable cars were ordered by shippers. Of these 2,982 or almost ninety-six per cent, were furnished on the same day, 148 or almost four per cent, on the next day, and only three as late as the third day.

A sprained ankle will usually disable the injured person for three or four weeks. This is due to lack of proper treatment. When Chamberlain's Liniment is applied a cure may be effected in three or four days. This liniment is one of the best and most remarkable preparations in use. Sold by all dealers.

CAFFEY ACQUITTED

A jury in County Court brought in a verdict of not guilty on Wednesday night in the case of the People vs. James Caffrey, of Fulton, who was charged with selling tubercular tainted beef.

It is safe to guess that Chicago woman who declared that men are useless creatures never called on a husband to button her up the back.

Tricking a Game Warden.

When a game warden bought seven pounds of meat and paid a dollar a pound for it he thought he was getting some pretty convincing evidence against a man in Herkimer county whom he supposed to be a chronic violator of the game law. The proprietor found this particular piece of meat in an icehouse one hot August day, and he spotted it for venison.

"What will you take for that chunk of meat?" he asked the owner. "That's a tender piece of meat," replied the woodsman, with a wink at the stranger, "and meat is dear way back up here. I wouldn't part with it for less 'n a dollar a pound."

"Well, give me a pound."

"Nope; couldn't do that. It would spite the piece for cooking to do that."

The game warden had to take the whole thing, and he paid $7 for it, satisfied that he had caught one of the worst game law violators in the Adirondacks. Down to Albany he sent the meat for the forest, fish and game commission to analyze to prove it venison. But it wasn't. It was real. The backwoodsmen tell the story as one of the best jokes ever played on a game protector.—New York Tribune.

Montevideo English.

A letter from a concern in Montevideo, South America, to a Chicago firm:

"My dear sir: We know; you ask for agents. We can offer you this. Our office has the representation many articles we can offer the representation yours. We ought to know you; we have placemen and gadders whose business is only to sell our articles. Our business is diffused till some Brazilian villages; where the American articles are worth of the highest attention. Our mind is that, the diffused of the news is the best middle for the know; all things; and we don't stop in middle for its circulation; we have decided the appear of The Commercial Review next issue where you can be fellow-laborers; and we with no one expending; that is; to say always; you dispense us any casiness."

We like "gadders," as applied to traveling men, don't you?—Chicago Tribune.

Columns of St. Mark.

Two memorable granite columns, known as the columns of St. Mark, brought from the Holy Land in 1120 and standing in front of the quay and landing steps of the Piazzetta, have been associated with the fortunes of Venice for many years. At first they lay prostrate for a long time, while no one would undertake to raise them. But a reward offered by the doge at length induced one Nicolo Barrattieri (Nick the Blackleg) to offer his services. He succeeded and claimed as his reward the privilege of carrying on between the columns games of chance, elsewhere prohibited by law. To neutralize this as much as possible it was enacted that all public executions should take place on the same spot. One column is surmounted by the Lion of St. Mark. The other carries a fine figure of St. Theodore, the patron saint of the city, who stands upon a crocodile and with sword and buckler gives token that the motto of Venice is "Defense, Not Defiance."

He Found His Man.

Englishmen are rather fond of poking fun at those parts of Great Britain where other than the Anglo-Saxon element is dominant, and a favorite subject for jest is the prevalence of the Jones family in Wales.

One of the colleges of Oxford university was much resorted to by Welshmen. A man from another college looking for a friend went into its quadrangle and shouted, "Jones!"

All the windows looking on the quadrangle flew open.

"I mean John Jones," said the searcher.

Half the windows closed.

"I mean the John Jones who has a toothbrush," he explained.

All the windows closed but one.—Topeka State Journal.

One of Tom Hood's Last Jokes.

Shortly before his death, being visited by a clergyman whose features as well as language were more lugubrious than consoling, Hood looked up at him compassionately and said, "My dear sir, I am afraid your religion doesn't agree with you."—Punch's Reminiscences.

Force of Habit.

A street car conductor who recently embraced religion was called upon to take up the Sunday morning offering. He did very well until he came to a boy. "Young man," he said sternly, "you will have to pay half fare."

Tree Growth.

A young oak grows three feet in three years. In the same time an elm grows eight feet three inches.

Upon their return a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Bracey, to which fifty guests were invited. After a social evening, refreshments were served. The presents were costly and beautiful, consisting of silver, linen, china, glass, money and various other articles. The value of the many presents show the esteem in which the young people are held. #### COURT DENIES MOTION

The Appellate division of the Supreme court in session at Rochester on Tuesday, denied a motion made by E. M. White of Phoenix, appearing for City Attorney G. M. Fanning of Fulton, to dismiss the appeal of the plaintiff in the action of F. A. Gage against the Common Council of the city of Fulton. The plaintiff in the action becomes the appellant in the Appellate division, having appealed from Justice Andrews' decision in vacating an injunction which he granted upon the motion of Mr. Gage's counsel, Claude E. Golle, restraining the Common Council of the City of Fulton from offering for sale a certain franchise for the distribution of so-called Niagara power in the city of Fulton. However, the order denying the motion to dismiss was conditioned upon the completion of the appeal by the appellant within three days and the clerk of the court was directed to place this action at the head of the court's calendar for December 8. It appears that at the time of the illness of Mr. Galle with typhoid fever and the quarantine of Mr. Fanning on account of a case of diphtheria in his family, the matter of the placing of the matter on the Appellate division's calendar for November 15th was entrusted to another local attorney and that this attorney failed to so note it, with the result that the matter was not on the calendar as planned.

Tuesday before the Appellate division, Attorney Charles L. Stone of Syracuse, for Mr. Galle, argued against the hearing of the case before the January term, stating that it would make no particular difference, etc., whether it were argued or not before that time. However, he court in making the order made the same conditional upon the completion of the appeal and its argument on December 8th.

DO YOUR CHRISTMAS SHOPPING EARLY

You did it last year earlier than before. Do it early again.

It is better for you. You will be less crowded in the doing of it. You will have a better choice of the commodities that are offered, and more time to make your choices.

It is a great deal better for the forces in the shops; the girls and men who wait on you, and deliver your purchases. The strain of the Christmas shopping on the shop girls, in particular, is still very severe. Mitigate it, you who can, by every means in your power. Get your matters out of the way early. There will be many who won't, and a good many who can't, and the rush will be hard enough in any case.

Do your Christmas shopping early! It is wise, it is thrifty, and it is kind.

THIS IS A BACHELOR'S CHIMNEY.

New line of Holiday Stationery at Conley Brothers.

At last, with a wag of his head, "Good friend, don't ask me the reason, I came. Just say if there's something you'd like—I'm the same."

Come, up with your stockings—I vow I'll be home. That this is a bachelor's chimney!"

Santa Claus stood on the hearthstone, And I half rose from the bed. But I uttered no word, for my heart was stirred, And I thought of the years long sped.

"Is there nothing you lack?" He spoke with glee. "I'm your fairy godfather, you know," said he. "In my pack are wonderful things—come see."

Yes, 'em for a bachelor's chimney."

Santa Claus laughed on the hearthstone. But I smiled not from my bed.

A great longing filled my soul and kindled The joy that his kind face shed. "The gift I desire—I fear 'twill cost— Is the light of two eyes 'neath the marble mosed. Go bring me the love that I loved and lost!"

And the night wind moaned in the chimney.

Santa Claus abashed at the hearthstone, And I sank back on my bed. And the embers fell like a ghostly kneel To ashes gray and dead.

"God only the wish of your stricken soul!" He sighed, and I saw a tear drop fall.

"The boon that you crave is beyond my dole."

And no foe with the wind in the chimney.

Christmas North and South. Washington celebrates Christmas in the northern style, as is New England—that is to say, by simply closing the stores and keeping quiet—but Alexandria, Va., celebrates in good old southern style, with rockets, roman candles, fireworks, torpedoes, noise and general rejoicing hilarity. Northern people often wonder why

It is that the southerners celebrate Christmas like the Fourth of July and the latter holiday like Christmas, but the reason is not far to seek. The southern Christmas is the Christmas of old Merrie England, Germany and France before the reformation. According to the view of all good and orthodox Christians of that period, the birth of Christ was an event such as to cause delight and general rejoicing among men, and consequently they celebrated the Lord's birthday with the proper demonstrations of rejoicing. The Puritans were inclined to frown down religion of this sort, so that when America was settled by Cavalier and Puritan each celebrated the day in his own way.—Washington Post.

ANOTHER STURDY PIONEER GONE

The True Northerner of Paw Paw Mich., of November 25, says: Uncle John Cook, whom everyone was pleased to call his friend, has gone. After a short illness he passed away at the home of his son, J. S. Porter township, on Tuesday morning of this week.

John Cook was born on August 27, 1826, being past 84 years of age at the time of his death. His baptismal register is on the records of the parish church of Old Bolingbroke, Lincolnshire, England. He was the second of a large family of children of poor, but unusually industrious and respectable parents. Capt. James Cook, was one of his ancestors, and Thos. Cook and son, tourist agents of London, are his relatives.

Deceased had no school training, and as was the custom among the peasant class at that time, he commenced a life of toil as shepherd lad at the age of seven years. Then followed ten years of life as a servant, and it was in this capacity that he learned much about the care of stock and the handling of good horses.

He started for America on March 4th, 1851, and after a stormy voyage landed in New York April 16. Thence he came by steamboat and emigrant train to Paw Paw reaching here on April 27. In Uncle John's own language he "had 12 English sovereigns in his pocket, a good watch, was well clothed, had a good constitution, sober habits and was right willing to work."

His knowledge of horses earned him a job in the Exchange tavern, now the Dyckman house stables, and was employed there as hostler for many years. He was an employee a good portion of the time there of the late J. M. Longwell. Notwithstanding the many temptations that surrounded a young man at that time and in such a position, he always held firmly to the temperance pledge he had taken in England, and never drank the beverage. He left the Dyckman house stables in 1873, and located on a farm in northeast Decatur, which place he owned at the time of his death. He was a good farmer and took much pride in the development of his land.

He was a hardworking, industrious man. Generous and public spirited. Counting no man's favor, and fearing no man's frown. He was one of the men who met at the old court house in Paw Paw in 1854 and organized the republican party. Later however, he left this party, and was a zealous and patriotic democrat during the remainder of his days. He was the nominee at one time of his party for state senator. While he had no advantages of an early education, he worked hard to get the rudiments of learning and was a fair student. He was a great reader, and was better informed on the topics of the day, than the majority of educated men.

He was twice married, both wives having preceded him to the great beyond. One daughter by his first wife, Mrs. Mary Johnson, of Fulton, N. Y., survives him, and was at his bedside during his last sickness. Four children by his second wife are left to mourn his death, William, John, Mrs. Burlington of Porter and one daughter in Three Rivers.

Uncle John had been in his usual rugged and robust health up until a few weeks ago. He was in Paw Paw during the fair last fall, and stated to the writer at that time that "he attended the first fair ever held in Paw Paw, and wanted to come to this one, as it would probably be his last."

The funeral will be held from the Porter church on Friday.

He had a large acquaintance in Van Buren county, and it will be safe to say, that in all his large circle of acquaintances he had not a single enemy. He was a friend to all, and will be missed by all as a kind and affectionate father, a good neighbor, a good man and a true friend.

REV. C. J. TAFT ACCEPTS CALL

The Binghamton Press of November 28, contains the following item of commendation of a former Fultonian which will be read with appreciation and interest by The Times readers:

At the close of the services at the East Side Congregational church last evening, the pastor, Rev. Clinton J. Taft, read his resignation to take effect December 31, he having accepted a call to the First Congregational church of Corning, which Rev. N. E. Fuller served as pastor until recently.

The resignation came as a great surprise to some, but many had had intimations of what was coming. Mr. Taft had previously advised the church committee of what he contemplated doing. There is great regret over the resignation by the members of the church and congregation.

Mr. Taft came to Binghamton five and one-half years ago, just after the East Side Congregational church had been organized and under his direction the new church was built and equipped. This last summer about $3,000 was raised and spent improving the property, making it now one of the finest, up-to-date church edifices in the city, conservatively estimated to be worth $12,000. The membership has more than doubled, many organizations perfected in the church and its scope of influence extended to the whole community. In fact, from every standpoint Mr. Taft's pastorate has been regarded a success.

He has been an active member of the Ministerial Association and has taken an interest in all reforms and matters of civic betterment, so that he will be sorely missed from many circles. Mrs. Taft is an accomplished musician, having appeared at numerous functions throughout the city and at times acting as organist of the East Side Congregational church. Two beautiful baby girls, Helen and Edythe, swell the members of the Taft household to four.

Mr. Taft has received a unanimous call to the pulpit of the First Congregational church of Corning, recently made vacant by the resignation of Dr. N. E. Fuller, who has gone to the Good Will Congregational church in Syracuse. Mr. Taft is the only candidate who has been seriously considered by the Corning church. Several weeks ago a delegation appointed by the Corning church heard Mr. Taft preach here in his church on the East Side. They returned loud in their praises of his pulpit ability and immediately advised the pulpit committee to invite him to spend a Sunday in Corning. This they did, Mr. and Mrs. Taft spending last Sunday there looking over the ground. Mr. Taft was favorably impressed with the outlook and remarked that he believed the possibilities were excellent for building up a very strong church on account of the central location and the rapidly growing community around the church. On the other hand, the congregation were pleased with his pulpit efforts, and it was evident that something tangible was likely to come of the visit.

On Tuesday evening the committee on the new pastor, consisting of nine persons, met and unanimously voted to recommend Mr. Taft to the church as the one to succeed Dr. Fuller, and at yesterday morning's service the congregation voted unanimously to extend him a call. The matter was communicated to Mr. Taft yesterday afternoon by phone, whereupon Mr. Taft decided to read his resignation last evening in order that he may begin the new year in his new field. The salary will be $1,200 and the use of a beautiful $5,000 10-room house completed only a short time ago. The church is the leading one on the north side of Corning and includes in its membership many of the prominent citizens of the place. The total number of members is about 400.

The letter of resignation of Mr. Taft follows:

To the Members of the East Side Congregational Church and Congregation, Greeting.

Dear Brethren:

Nearly five and a half years ago I accepted your cordial call to become pastor of this church. Providence had directed in bringing us together at that time I believed, and still believe, moreover, the passing years have brought many evidences of the blessing of God as we have sought unitedly to build His kingdom among men. Our fellowship has been delightful as co-workers. In fact, I count these years of service here for Christ the most joyous and productive of my life thus far. Now and then during this period voices have come calling to me, seeking to lure me to other fields, but I have been deaf to all of them. Recently, however, a Macedonian cry has reached me from which I cannot well turn away. It has not come as did Paul's through a vision in the night, but by day. I feel that it is none the less divine and urgent therefore. It seems to me quite as much the call of God as did the one to which I responded when I came here, for it is spontaneous, hearty, a unanimous call to a larger church with a larger field, and therefore the possibility of rendering larger service to the Master than here.

Last Sunday Mrs. Taft and I visited this church and were royally received. While there we investigated conditions, and since then we have earnestly prayed over the matter and deliberated upon it carefully, at length reaching the conclusion that we ought to accept the call which has come to us—that the Lord is practically saying to us: "Behold I have set before thee an open door"—one that we must enter.

In saying this I would in no wise disparage the value of this church and its opportunity. Doubtless there is much yet to be accomplished here, and you have a fine equipment with which to do it. But a chance in the leadership of a church occasionally is wise both for the leader and those led. So while for many reasons I am reluctant to break the ties which have bound us together as pastor and people through the years, yet I feel that I must be obedient to the voice of the Great Shepherd when He says: "Follow Me into a new field."

"Men may come and men may go, but I go on forever," sang the brook. So it is with the church. And though I go from you, I shall never lose my interest in this church which it has been my great pleasure to serve as its first spiritual guide, like Moses the first leader of Israel. Soon you will be choosing some Joshua to lead you on. May he be courageous and careful like the successor of Moses—a man after God's own heart, who shall inspire you to undertake still greater things in the name of Christ.

Brethren, I herewith tender my resignation as pastor of the East Side Congregational church to take effect December 31, 1910, in order that I may accept a call to the pastorate of Corning First Congregational church of Corning, N. Y.; and I would request that you call a meeting as soon as convenient to take suitable action upon this resignation.

"And now I commend you to God, and to the word of His grace, which is able to build you up, and to give you the inheritance among all them that are sanctified."

Faithfully yours,
CLINTON J. TAFT.

LITTLE MERRY CHRISTMAS

How a Wolf's Greeting Saved Black Carston's Life

By GEORGE ETHELBERT WALSH

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"Merry Christmas!"
"Huh! What's that?"
The gruff voice took some of the enthusiasm out of the childish treble, and it faltered somewhat weakly in repetition.

"Merry Christmas, sir!"
The big bearded man stared at the diminutive speaker and for an instant the hard drawn lines on the heavy face threatened to relax, but a moment later a spasm as of pain shot across it, and the voice grumbled:

"There isn't any merry Christmas—not in this world! Whoever taught you such an idea? Huh! Merry Christmas! I haven't seen one for forty years, and—"

The little white, drawn face had an intense appeal to it, but it fell upon a hard, stony nature. The forty years of hard life had dried up the well-springs of sympathy, and the gruff miner stumbled away, leaving the boy a mute witness to one of the tragedies of life.

A few minutes later the child turned and walked in the opposite direction. There were no tears in the wondering eyes, but the mute face had the hunted sorrow of a wounded animal. Twice the little legs halted as if too weak to carry the slight body, and once the boy dropped on a fallen log and stared ahead of him.

It was unlike any Christmas the child had ever before experienced. Christmas had always been ushered in by snow, sleet, rain or cold north winds, but in this strange new land the flowers were in bloom in the dead of winter, and northern birds warbled and cooed from nearly every leafy bower. It was hard to realize that in the faraway northern city the land was wrapped in the icy embrace of the frost king. A little pang of disappointment crept into his heart, and unconsciously he sighed for the old familiar scenes.

"Black" Carston stumbled down the slope of the hillside after leaving the boy, a growing anger and rage disturbing his mind. He was in no mood that morning to have the festive season of the year recalled to him. Only the night before the sluice which he had constructed had been washed away by a mountain torrent and filled with loosened stones and huge boulders. It was only one of a long series of accidents which had followed his unlucky ventures, and at first he had accepted it philosophically.

But the piping voice of the child had made his ill luck more acute. "Merry Christmas!" He muttered the words under his breath and kicked viciously at the loose stones. When he came to the wrecked sluice he glared at it savagely and finally sneered:

"Well, what's the odds? There's no gold here anyway—not a cent's worth—and I've only got the disappointment a little earlier than I expected. I'll pull out tonight and make another try over at Copper creek."

Then, with a grin: "And that youngster wished me a merry Christmas! Huh, what a foolish kid he is!"

The man dropped moodily on a rock and refilled his pipe. He sat there a long time smoking. Somehow his

THERE WAS A LITTLE CRY OF EXULTATION, thoughts drifted away from the seared mountainside, and he forgot the work ahead of him. His disorganized camp lay around unheeded. If any emotion stirred within him it was manifested only by quicker puffs from his black pipe.

It was Christmas day—Christmas in the great mining region where "Black" Carston had worked and toiled for years without appreciable result. The calendar had ceased to hold any meaning for him, and Christmas was an unknown holiday to him. He didn't know, and he didn't care, whether it was Christmas or Memorial day. One day was like all others to him.

But the merry greeting of the stray child from the east had impressed it upon his mind that others in the great world of work and trouble still held to the observance of holidays. He knew little of the boy's history—just a few snatches of rumor that had reached him. A poor little derelict of a great city, crumpled and worn out prematurely by disease and environment, the child had been rescued by some charitable society and sent west to find new health and strength in the more congenial climate.

Why had the boy selected this morning to greet him with words that seemed to drive the iron deeper into his soul? "Merry Christmas! Huh! There was no merry Christmas in this world—not for such outcasts!"

For an hour the man was absorbed in strangely perplexing thoughts. Then he rose slowly and picked up his few belongings. He threw them into a pile and kicked them viciously as if they had been responsible for his troubles.

Up near the head of the sluice, where the mountain torrent of the night before had dislodged the boulders and nearly wiped out his camp, he found his pickaxe half buried in debris. He rescued it from the dirt and gravel, and as a parting thrust at the cruel rocks which had defied him he sunk the implement deep into their sides. The pick crushed through the shell of the rocks so easily that the man almost lost his balance.

"Merry Christmas, eh?" he grunted.

"Merry Christmas!"
He withdrew the pick and started to walk away. A slight oozing of water from the scar caused by his pick attracted his attention. He stared at it and then mechanically stooped to examine the gravel and splintered rock. With a little gasp of surprise he gathered another handful and spread the pieces out on his rough palm. Three times he dug up all he could hold in one palm and repeated the operation.

Suddenly a fierce light shot into his eyes, and his face assumed the eager, greedy look of a wild animal on the scent of some helpless prey. He dropped on hands and knees and dug at the sand and rock until the blood seeped from scuffed fingers and dyed the rocks. He was for all the world a wild beast tearing and rending a bloodless victim to death.

Again and again he held the samples close to his eyes and each time grunted with satisfaction. He sprang out of the hole and attacked the rocks with his heavy miner's pick. The blows fell with sharp, metallic sounds; but, unmindful of the noise, the miner worked feverishly and stubbornly at the excavation.

There was a little cry of exultation. The man held within his hand a sample of dull yellowish rock that sent the blood coursing rapidly through his veins. The freshest of the night had unearthed a vein of gold which promised to bring true all his visions of the past.

Deeper and deeper into the bowels of the earth he dug, following the course of the vein and grunting his satisfaction at each fresh discovery. Had he not been carried away by his greed and excitement he would have hesitated and withdrawn from his perilous position. His expert knowledge of mining would have told him that he was courting a terrible danger.

But the good fortune which had come to him after forty years of disappointment made him temporarily crazy, and he forgot everything except the gold which he was unearthing. Then a sudden blow from his pick loosened a torrent of sand, and the rocks above his head groaned and settled down.

Carston was instantly alert and realized to a flash his danger. He sprang back toward the mouth of the opening, leaving his pick and samples of gold behind. But the avalanche of rocks and dirt was too quick for him. It fell around and over him until the light of day was shut from view. A heavy boulder rolled over on his leg and pinned him to the soft sand.

The roar of the descending avalanche subsided, and the miner drew a deep breath when he realized that all immediate danger was passed. An overhanging ledge had partly protected him, and he had a space of a few feet in which to breathe and move. The wall of loose stones and rocks could not be very thick, for he saw glimmers of light shining through.

But when he attempted to extricate himself from the prison he found that a worse fate had befallen him than he imagined. His right leg was crushed and held in a vise-like grip by a huge boulder that had settled down on him.

In vain he tried to move the rock and pull his leg free. But the boulder was immovable, and the excruciating pain made him faint, sick. For hours he tore at the sand and gravel at his feet and snarled and snarled at the rock which held him a prisoner.

Then, faint and exhausted, he lay back and rested. The pain grew past endurance, and unconsciousness mercifully relieved him. When his senses returned he renewed the struggle, but with the same hopeless effort. His prison was located far up on the mountainside where no human creature would be likely to stray for weeks or months at a time.

"Black" Carston was a man of iron will and rugged constitution, and he did not yield easily to death.

During the long hours of the day he fought and struggled with almost superhuman effort. Then the pain, loss of blood and exhaustion broke his spirit. With a little sob he dropped his head back on the rocks and resigned himself to his fate.

"So this is Christmas day! Merry Christmas, eh?"

The child's morning greeting had clung to his mind, and it sprang to his lips unbidden again and again. Then his thoughts wandered, and he muttered over in his troubled dreams: "Merry Christmas, merry Christmas! Ha, ha! Merry Christmas, youngster!"

In his agony he rolled over and wrenched the tortured limb until, relief came again through sheer exhaustion.

During the few lucid moments of the child Carston tried to think of escape, but his strength was unequal to it.

Human nature yielded gradually to the strain. The waking, lucid moments grew fewer and of less duration. His mind wandered over the past. He babbled and talked in his sleep. At times forms seemed to surround him, and he forgot his predicament in talking to them.

Then music seemed to fill his senses, and he heard voices which soothed his mind. They were all singing the refrain that had so offended his ears that morning. Clear above all the others a childish voice sang. He was in church, but the voice was that of a child or of an angel, Carston could not say which.

"I wish you a merry Christmas! I wish you a merry Christmas! I wish you a merry, merry, merry, merry, merry Christmas!"

Almost unconsciously the man's lips framed the words and repeated "a merry, merry Christmas!" It was far from a merry Christmas to him lying there imprisoned in the rocks, with one leg crushed, but he was past physical pain now, and it was only the mind which took cognizance of the world about.

Then the high, piping voice changed. It seemed to come from a greater distance, vague, shadowy and almost inaudible. Carston strained his ears. It was an old familiar tune, and the words stirred a responsive chord in him:

WILL JONES

"OR, ARE YOU ALIVE?"

"Good news on Christmas morning! Good news, oh, children, dear! Christ was born in Bethlehem And is living now and here."

The voice and song trailed off until lost entirely to the ear. When silence fell around the man vaguely wondered if this were death. He had often thought of death. He had seen it in so many different forms that the fear of it had seldom disturbed him. Now he dreaded it—no, wished for it, for the pain was past endurance, and there was no release from his prison.

He seemed to wait and listen eagerly for the song again, but all was silence around. A great dreary blank drifted across his mind, and he was unconscious of pain or suffering. How long this stupor lasted he could not say, but when consciousness returned again an agonizing pain shot through his leg and body. He groaned and tried to change his position.

Then close to his lips a little sobbing voice cried out: "Oh, are you alive? I thought I was too late. Wait a minute and I will get the leg free."

It was dark all around, but Carston, looking up, saw stars shining overhead. They came through a big hole in the wall of rocks. His leg was so numb that feeling was nearly gone, but he was conscious of little hands digging and tearing at the dirt beneath the crushed limb. Then suddenly a great weight was lifted from it and the little sobbing voice said:

"Now pull with me."

How the little hands worked the dirt and rocks loose from the boulder and how the two of them strained and pulled to extricate the man's body from the death trap Carston could never clearly understand, but after an hour of agony he felt himself lying on the surface of the earth with a little, slim, slender creature by his side, gasping and panting from exertion. Tiny drops of moisture trickled on Carston's face, but they were blood from lacerated hands and not tears. The little sobs were dry and tearless. Carston swooned again in spite of his heroic will to fight back the weakness. In the interval the stars shone down upon him in their cold, hard brilliance, and the soft, cool air filled his panting lungs with heady strength.

They carried the man to the nearest mining camp and gave him such medical attendance as he needed, after a week of fever and delirium Carston's strong constitution brought him through successfully. His first thought was of the child who had rescued him.

"Bring that merry Christmas youngster to me!" he almost shouted. "Where is he? Don't keep me waiting."

Rugged old Carston, black by name and character, hung his arms around the slender neck and, with a great sob in his voice, cried: "Merry, merry Christmas! A merry Christmas, youngster, and God bless you!"

But even then he did not know that his faint "Merry Christmas!" uttered in his feverish dreams when imprisoned in the rocks had first attracted the little sleeper's attention and was responsible for his rescue. That was long ago, and Carston now celebrates the Christmas season with religious zeal and ceremony, and there is always a little "Merry Christmas!" to help him, for nothing could satisfy him but to acknowledge his rescuer "Merry Christmas!"

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

Nov. 30.—For the first time in twenty-seven years, a Democrat is to be physician at the County Jail at Fulton. At today's session of the Board of Supervisors, Mr. A. S. Barker's resolution, appointing Dr. Charles E. Low was adopted.

Mr. Pierce called attention to the fact that the official minutes had himself, Mr. Hamer and Mr. Stanton voting "nay" when the roll was called upon the vote taken for the Supply Committee. This was a mistake as they had voted "aye," he said. The correction was ordered.

By W. M. Barker: Providing for the tax upon several towns of the county for highway purposes. Adopted.

By Mr. Buck: That an accountant be employed to examine the books of the County Treasurer's office. Adopted.

By A. S. Barker: Each Supervisor and one per cent. to the abstract of his town as compensation for distributing same. Adopted.

By A. S. Barker: Appointing the Semi-Weekly Palladium as the official paper of the county for publishing the session laws. Adopted.

Mr. Rowe presented the report of the indebtedness of the town of Volney. Ordered printed.

Messrs. Jackson, Thompson, Buck and Ouderkirk presented reports from Justices of their towns.

Mr. Hydorn presented the report of Coroner Hollis, of Sandy Creek. Referred to Committee on Coroners' Accounts.

A report from the Comptroller state that the county's share of good roads bonds and sinking fund this year is $9,687.86.

A communication from the Oswego Aerie of Eagles favoring the building of a tuberculosis hospital, was referred to the special committee having the matter in hand.

On motion of Mr. Hamer the Chair appointed a committee of three to inspect Supervisors' manuals sent here by publishing houses. The committee is Messrs. Hamer, A. S. Barker and W. M. Gallagher.

Mr. Buck presented an invitation from the County Superintendent of Poor for the Board to visit the almshouse at Mexico.

The Chairman suggested that the invitation be accepted, and the clerk was directed to provide transportation for those who desire to go for a week from today.

Lieutenant Plack, of the Forty-eighth Separate Company, made a requisition for labor for the State Armory as follows: Armorer, $1,095; engineer, $1,095; laborer, $750. Total, $2,940. Referred to Ways and Means Committee.

Oswego, Dec. 1.—There was a conference between the Democratic and Republican Supervisors today relative to the appointing of janitors at the Courthouse and county building. N. O. Marion was elected janitor of the Court house by a vote of nineteen to twelve. On the ballot for janitor of the county building, A. S. Barker presented the name of Florence Wilcox and Mr. Wilcox received all of the votes but five.

Mr. Ouderkirk presented resolutions relative to the improvements of the highways in Granby. The road from Fulton to Hannibal is going to cost $3,666 in addition to the original levy. Of this the town will pay $366. The road from Fulton city line to the town line of Oswego will cost $11,800 more than originally estimated. The State will pay $6,844 of this, the county $3,276 and the town $1,180. Adopted.

By Mr. Gayer: Appointing James Ouderkirk a committee to acquire lands in Granby for highway purposes. Adopted.

By Mr. Rowe: Levy $1,060 on Volney to pay certificates of indebtedness for removing snow. Adopted.

By Mr. Pierce: Levying $25 for care of soldiers' monument to be erected by Mrs. T. M. Costello. Adopted.

Mr. Terry presented the report of the District Attorney. During the year there were seventy-five indictments found, fifty-two convictions resulted from trials, five acquittals and the remainder of the cases are undisposed of. Ordered printed.

The following presented reports from highway superintendents for cutting brush, asking that the amount in each case be ordered levied: W. M. Barker, New Haven, $9.38; V. D. Pierce, Albion, $10.60; Eugene Rowe, Volney, $39.50; G. A. Jackson, Palermo, $32.01. Referred.

Mr. Wilcox was granted the privilege of the floor and thanked the members for reappointing him janitor of the county building.

Chairman Sweetland made the following committees:

For Working Prisoners—Hydorn, Potter, Crimmins.

Tuberculosis Hospital—Tighe, Silver, Woods.

Special Bridge Committee—W. M. Barker, F. W. Gallagher, Hamer.

Oswego, December 2.—The session of the Board of Supervisors was given today by the introduction of a resolution by Supervisor Hartnett designating the banks in which the County Treasurer of Oswego county must deposit funds during the year beginning January 1.

The Hartnett resolution designated the Second National Bank of Oswego to receive 50 per cent. of the funds; the Citizens National Bank of Fulton, 30 per cent.; the Mexico National Bank, 10 per cent.; and the Pulaski National Bank 10 per cent. and shut out the First National Bank of Oswego and the First National Bank of Fulton.

In the Hartnett resolution the previous question was moved which shut out any debate and gaged the members from a free and honest expression on the merits of the resolution. The resolution occasioned more bitterness than as appeared in the board in years.

The Board by the close vote of 15 to 15 with Supervisor A. S. Barker, Democrat, absent, voted to sustain the main question which shut out debate and then the Hartnett resolution designating the one Oswego bank, one Fulton bank and the Mexico and Pulaski institutions was adopted.

Supervisor Rounds, Democrat, of Oswego Town, denounced the Hartnett resolution. He said just as long as he remained a member of the Board he would never favor any resolution on which a free and open discussion of the merits of any resolution was prevented.

Supervisor W. M. Barker said he opposed the designation of the banks named because others were discriminated against. He said the Hartnett resolution was unfair as it shut out one of the Oswego banks and the First National Bank of Fulton.

He said he was glad to say that it was only the second time in his seven years membership on the board that a resolution had ever been introduced which prevented an open discussion of a resolution. He regretted such methods. Mr. Barker then declared that it was the first time the board had ever interfered with a County Treasurer depositing the funds of his office in the banks he desired.

The County Treasurer is required by the Board of Supervisors to give a bond protecting the county against any loss during his term of office. As the people hold him responsible under bonds he has always selected his own banks.

The Hartnett resolution designating the banks and moving the previous question was introduced at the close of the session.

Supervisor Pierce amended that the resolution be made a special order for one week from today.

Supervisor Sweetland said he regretted to say that he did not think this could be done as the Hartnett resolution moved the previous question which required immediate action and no debate. He said he was sorry for reasons he could not explain under the circumstances.

Supervisor Andelfinger as a new member asked for information relative to the procedure in the designating of banks. Chairman Sweetland said it had always been customary for the County Treasurer to deposit the funds in any banks he desired.

Supervisor Hartnett said the supervisors had a legal right to designate the banks.

Supervisor Gallagher called the chair's attention to the fact that Mr. Hartnett was debating his own resolution although he had moved the previous question. He said by this action he had given the right to the chair to entertain the Pierce order amendment.

The chairman said he regretted to have to hold that he would have to order a vote on the Hartnett resolution in this form: "Shall the main question be now put?" He said Supervisors voting "yes" on this resolution were voting to shut off any debate and those who voted "no" were voting to permit an expression on the resolution.

The vote follows:

To shut out debate—Supervisors Stanton, Hartnett, Fuller, Ouderkirk, Lockwood, Bough, Gaffney, F. W. Gallagher, Woods, Comerford, Crimmins, Niles, Thompson, Rowe, Potter, Tighe, total 18.

In favor of debate—Pierce, Hamer, W. M. Gallagher, Gayer, Snow, Buck, W. M. Barker, Rounds, Andelfinger, Sweetland, Jackson, Terry, Hydorn, Silver, Vincent, total 15.

Chairman Sweetland then ordered a vote on the Hartnett resolution designating the banks already named and it was adopted by a vote of 20 to 11. The vote as follows:

For Supervisors, Stanton, Hartnett, Fuller, Ouderkirk, Lockwood, Buck, Bough, Gaffney, F. W. Gallagher, Woods, Comerford, Crimmins, Jackson, Niles, Thompson, Terry, Hydorn, Rowe, Potter, Tighe, Total 20.

Against—Supervisors, Pierce, Hamer, Gallagher, Gayer, Snow, Barker, Rounds, Andelfinger, Sweetland, Silver, Vincent, Total 11.

After declaring the vote Chairman Sweetland said that now that he was at liberty to discuss the resolution he wanted to say that he regretted the action of the board in adopting the resolution more than anything that ever occurred since his membership in the board. He said his position was extremely embarrassing because of the fact that he was chairman of the board and cashier of one of the banks favored.

He said he appreciated the action of the supervisors in designating the Second National bank but regretted that the First National bank had been cut off. He said it had always been the custom of the County Treasurer to recognize both Oswego Banks and he felt this practice should have been continued instead of the board stepping in and shutting out one of the Oswego banks. He said when he learned from Supervisor Hartnett this morning that he proposed to introduce such a resolution he insisted that this should not be done. He said it did not look like good policy and form to shut out an Oswego institution. He wanted the people to know that he was against the Hartnett resolution.

Supervisor Rounds declared that he believed in fairness in all things and he wanted everybody to know that he would not stand for resolutions with a no debate provision attached. He said it was establishing a bad precedent.

Supervisor Gayer of Fulton, said he voted against the Hartnett resolution because it discriminated against the First National bank of Fulton. He was opposed to Mr. Hartnett's action in not including both Fulton National banks.

Supervisor Andelfinger said he wanted to go on record as strongly opposed to any such discrimination against banks.

Supervisor Ouderkirk presented his report as special committee in regard to the purchase of land from George Burdiss of Granby for highway purposes, which showed that the property could be purchased one parcel for $35 and the other for $1.

Supervisor Fuller moved that the report be accepted and Supervisor Ouderkirk authorized to purchase the property. Adopted.

Due Precautions.
In a town in Georgia there was an old preacher whose knowledge of the world was not wide nor deep, but who conceived it to be a place where, if one should trust his fellow men, he should at the same time keep an eye on his own interests.

One hot day he pulled off his coat and preached a vigorous sermon under the pines in his shirt sleeves. At the close of the open air service one of his admirers approached him and said regretfully:

"I don't suppose you know that the editor of one of the big New York Sunday papers was here when you pulled off your coat."

"I reckon I knew it well, for I'd been told of it," said the preacher calmly. "I don't believe he's as bad as he might be, and anyway I put my coat on the chair close by and had it right under my eye all the time."—Youth's Companion.

"If."
If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you;
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
But make allowances for their doubting too;
If you can wait and not be tired by waiting,
Or being lied about don't deal in lies,
Or being hated don't give away to hating,
And yet don't look too good, nor talk too wise:

If you can dream—and not make dreams your master;
If you can think—and not make thoughts your aim;
If you can meet with triumph and disaster
And treat these two impostors just the same;
If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,
Or watch the things you gave your life to broken,
And stoop and build 'em up with worn-out tools;

If you can make one heap of all your winnings
And risk it on one turn of pitch-and-toss,
And lose—and start again at your beginnings
And never breathe a word about your loss;
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
To serve your turn long after they are gone,
And so hold on when there is no thing in you
Except the will which says to them: "Hold on!"

If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with kings—nor lose the common touch;
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you,
If all men count with you, but none too much;
If you can fill the unforgiving minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours is the earth and everything that's in it,
And—which is more—you'll be a man, my son!"

THE TERROR'S CHRISTMAS.

Turkeys Were $17 Each During the Siege of Paris.

When the Christmas day of 1870 dawned upon Paris the city had been in the iron grip of the German investment for about three months. The winter was a bitterly cold one, the thermometer registering 10 degrees below freezing point on Christmas morning. The Seine was frozen over.

The poor's daily rations were a few ounces of horseflesh and a piece of repulsive looking black bread.

By Dec. 25 food prices had reached their highest point since the beginning of the siege. On Nov. 13 a pound of butter fetched $14 and a rabbit $3.50. By Dec. 19 rabbits had risen to $5, a box of sardines brought $2.50 and eggs 25 cents apiece. For one's Christmas dinner one could buy a goose for $10 or a turkey for $17. Pigeons were $3 each, and a small fowl could be obtained for $5. Ham was $1.50 a pound. As for vegetables, carrots and turnips were 4 cents each, and a bushel of potatoes cost $4.25. There was hardly any milk in Paris, and the little there was had to be preserved for the sick and wounded. However, there were oceans of wine, and the wine shops did a roaring trade.

For some time before Christmas the starving people had been feeding on cats, rats and dogs until by Dec. 25 a dish of cat's flesh was hardly obtainable. Dog was 80 cents a pound, and fine rats fetched 14 cents each. Many domestic pets were killed for food. "Poor Azor!" said a humorous citizen as he finished a stew made from his favorite dog. "How he would have enjoyed these bones!"

With true Parisian light heartedness the citizens tried to make the best of things, and the cafes and restaurants wore almost their normal aspect. At half past 10, however, an order of Trochu closed every shop and cafe, and by 11 o'clock Paris had gone to bed.

The midnight mass of Christmas eve was celebrated as usual in the churches, which were crowded with praying, weeping women. Newspapers appeared as usual, some of them containing glowing accounts of perfectly imaginary French successes. The satirical sheets were even more bitter and venomous than at other times and published scathing caricatures. Some showed the fallen emperor, Napoleon III., as a shoeblack at King William's boots, or as a beggar with his pockets turned inside out, or as a traitor handing over France to murderers, or as a thief making off with millions of the nation's money. Others depicted Julius Faure in taxes and pocketing Blumarch's gold and Trochu handing over the keys of Paris to a Prussian in exchange for a bag of coin. In all the idea of Parisians that France had been betrayed by those who ought to have protected her was prevalent.

So at this season of peace and good will suffering Paris was nearly at her last gasp. Owing to the tenacity of her rulers and citizens, however, her agony was to be prolonged for some weeks longer, as it was not until February that the negotiations for a capitulation began.

A Stitch of Pain.

A stitch is a sharp, spasmodic pain in the muscles of the side like the piercing of a needle and is very apt to be produced if exercise is taken immediately after a hearty meal. This arises because the nervous energy necessary for the proper working of the muscles in exercise is engaged in another direction—namely, in assisting the digestion of the food. Anything that interferes with the proper supply of nervous energy required for exercise, whether it be debility or the process of digestion or exhaustion arising from overexertion, is apt to cause this spasmodic pain.

A Handsome Woman

Every woman may not be handsome, but every woman should keep with care the good points nature has given her. No woman need have sallow skin, dull eye, blotchy complexion, who pays proper attention to her health. Where constipation, liver derangements, blood impurities and other irregularities exist, good complexion, bright eyes and sprightly movements cannot exist. Internal derangements reveal themselves sooner or later on the surface. Headache, dark rings around the eyes, sallow skin, a constant tired feeling—mean that the liver and digestive organs are needing help and correction. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets give this necessary help. They work in nature's own way. They do not merely flush the bowels but tone up the liver and stomach to fulfill their proper functions. So mild and gentle do they act that one hardly realizes that they have taken medicine. Chamberlain's Tablets can be relied upon to relieve biliousness, indigestion, constipation and dizziness. Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents.

OSWEGO COUNTY GROWING

The census of New York State by counties, announced Wednesday, shows that Oswego is the only one of the so-called Northern New York counties that has shown an increase in population during the last five years. The population of Oswego county was given as 71,684, which is a growth of 1,564 since 1905. In 1900 Oswego's population was 70,881; 1892, 70,970; 1880, 71,833; 1870, 77,911; 1855, 78,574 and 1845, 76,200. So it will be seen that Oswego county is coming back.

Jefferson county's population, 80,297, shows an increase of 3,455 over the Federal census of 1900, but a falling off of 162 since 1905. St. Lawrence county has fallen off 1,040 since 1896 and Lewis county 1,765. The present population of Lewis county is 24,849, making it the seventh smallest county in the State.

Oswego county's growth is encouraging while the loss in population in the neighboring counties is significant. For some time it has been noticeable that there has been a drift of people from Jefferson, Lewis and St. Lawrence to the farms in Oswego county and the figures indicate that the rural population of the county is not decreasing, in fact, probably slowly increasing.

The present census is of great importance on account of the fact that the reapportionment of the Congressional districts in the State will be based upon these figures. According to present plans the new Congressional districts which will be laid out by the coming Legislature will have a population of from 200,000 to 220,000. This being the case the Twenty-eighth district will have to be changed. As Onondaga county now has a population of 200,000 they will probably get a Congressman of their own and politicians believe that Madison county may be hooked with Oswego, Jefferson and Lewis in a new district. Madison county's population is given as 39,239 which would make a district comprising these four counties have a population of about 216,000.

We are told the New York Sun has postponed changing its name to the New Nationalist.

Washington diplomatic circles seem to think President Diaz has solved the problem of combining sarcasm with diplomacy.

Chicago, Ill.—This Chicago young woman, who is now 20 years old, has been educated by women. She has never had a beau or talked to a young man or boy without some women present. Now she is to be introduced into "Man's world" through the medium of a "coming out" party, and now it remains to be seen whether because of her original bringing up she will conduct herself as well or better than the average young woman, accept her proper share of attentions from the other sex, pick out the proper man to fall in love with, and then, last of all, settle down to a happy married life; or whether she will, like the child of a too stern parent, break away from her mother's apron strings with too much of a vengeance and make a fool of herself over men who might otherwise have made fools of themselves over her.

SURROGATE'S COURT

Appraisals of Estate Filed by County Treasurer Moore

Many appraisals of estates were filed in the Surrogate's office Monday by County Treasurer Moore. The estates with their net value follow: William Rivett, Fulton, $1,340.60; Harrietta Johnson, Fulton, $2,668.63; Hepzibah Hill, Fulton, $1,186.20; Fred Austin Looker, Volney, $2,646.64.

The Rivett estate goes to a number of distant relatives. A great-granddaughter, Hazel B. Alexander, gets $2,576 of the Johnson estate and a son $93.63. A daughter, Violet M. Pinder, gets $61.20 and another daughter, Jessie H. Hill, $1,125 of the Hill estate. The widow gets the life use of the Looker estate and it is then equally divided between a daughter, Mrs. W. A. Ebbie, and a son, Floyd.

An order was made Tuesday afternoon allowing Mead & Stranahan $200, J. C. Henry $78, A. Ware, as executrix, $62.50 and Dr. A. L. Hall $50, a total of $388.51 out of the estate of Job Fones, Hannibal, over which there was a contest.

Letters on the estate of Addison W. Taplin, who died in Volney November 19, leaving $1,000 personal property went to his widow, Carrie Taplin.

THOMAS MOORE FOR COMMANDER

Post O'Brien, Oswego, Nominates Officers at Meeting

Post O'Brien, G. A. R., met Wednesday at their rooms in the Armory and nominated officers for the coming year. The election will take place at their next meeting. The officers nominated were as follows:

Commander, Thomas Moore; senior vice, H. C. Jacobs; junior vice, L. J. Culver; quarter master, Albert Palmer; chaplain, James Moore; surgeon, Walter Van Aistyne; officer of the day, Edward Watson; officer of the guard, Levi Nibnor; delegates, M. V. Wadleigh and C. A. Taylor; trustees, M. V. Wadleigh and A. A. Sablin.

The U. S. Government in its "Pure Food Law" does not "indorse" or "guarantee" any preparation, as some manufacturers in their advertisements would make it appear. In the case of medicines the law provides that certain drugs shall be mentioned on the labels, if they are ingredients of the preparations. Ely's Cream Balm, the well-known family remedy for cold in the head, hay fever and nasal catarrh, doesn't contain a single injurious drug, so the makers have simply to print the fact that it complies fully with all the requirements of the law.

Mara's Voice.

Mme. Mara had a voice that extended from middle G to E in alt and was one of the most facile and flexible ever known. She delighted in the florid music of Hasse, Grunin, Benda, Jomelli, Pergolesi, Porpora, Spontini and others of that school and with the utmost ease executed passages that are now consigned to solo instruments, such as the violin and flute. She held the stage from 1771 to 1802, with an occasional appearance after the latter date.

DRIVE MONEY OUT OF ELECTION

Mosticello Watchman

"I want to drive money out of politics," says Governor-elect Foss. He expects to ask the Massachusetts Legislature to pass a law providing that the State pay all election expenses.

The Watchman would like to see a law in the State of New York making it a misdemeanor for a candidate to pay a cent for election purposes, and a State's prison offense for any of his friends to spend a dollar in his behalf. Such a law would do away with secret agents running up and down the Delaware river, placing $50 in one place and $50 in another place and $100 somewhere else, as was said to have been done for a certain candidate at the recent election.

POMONA GRANGE

The next regular session of Oswego County Pomona Grange will be held in the Armory, in Oswego, on Tuesday, December 13, 1910, commencing at 10 a. m.

The officers for the ensuing year will be elected, also the delegates to the State Grange.

Coffee will be provided for those who bring their lunch.

WHY CONTINUE?

Many friends of Mrs. Curle, who shared with her husband the honor connected with the discovery of radium, are advocating her admission to membership in the Paris Academy of Sciences.

The death of Garnes, the Academician, created the vacancy which it has been suggested Mrs. Curle should fill. Writing on the subject, a member of the scientific body says: "It will be difficult to overcome the prejudice against women members on the part of those with whom the choice rests. Should they, however, conclude to admit the learned woman they will be confronted by the paragraph in the constitution which excludes women from the meetings of the academy. Why continue the efforts? —Tribune.

The will of Senator David B. Hill, which was filed for probate last week shows that the estate amounts to about $200,000, Wolfert's Roost being placed at $150,000 and $50,000 in personal property.

Senator Hill's brother, Dr. Alonzo Hill, of Missouri, and two nephews and two nieces receive $10,000 each, and the balance of the estate is divided equally between two proteges of Senator Hill, Dr. Harvey Seymour Pearce and Peter H. Manville.

To the majority of us the announcement from Washington that spurious $100 bills are in circulation is absolutely immaterial.

FRUIT GROWERS TO MEET

The annual meeting of the Oswego County Fruit Growers Association will be held in the court house in Oswego, Saturday, December 10, 1910, commencing at 10 o'clock.

Prof. Stewart and Schoene of the State Experiment Station at Geneva will talk on fruit diseases, cabbage and potato troubles, uses of the lime-sulfur spray and insect pests.

CONFERENCE OF JUDGES

City and Village Magistrates to Meet With the State Probation Commission

Albany, Dec. 1.—The program for the second state conference of magistrates of cities and villages, to be held in Albany, December 10, has just been issued. The conference is for the purpose of discussing the work and possible improvements in police and children's courts. The speakers will include: Supreme Court Justice Page, Chief City Magistrate McAdoo and Kemper of New York, Judges Cornell of the New York Domestic Relations Court, Wilkin of the Brooklyn Children's Court, Nash of the Buffalo Domestic Relations Court, Shove of Syracuse, O'Connor of Utica, Piper of Niagara Falls, President Homer Folke of the state probation commission, Dr. William O. Stillman, president of the American humane society, Commissioner Maynard N. Clement of the state excise department, and James D. Sullivan, chief of the compulsory attendance division of the state education department.

One subject to be discussed is whether there are too many or too few arrests, and whether the practice of issuing a summons to bring offenders before the court without arrest should be extended. Other topics on the program include the procedure in juvenile courts, the treatment of cases of non-support, the enforcement of the compulsory school attendance law and of the excise law and the prosecution of cases of cruelty to children. Preceding the evening session, there will be an informal dinner at which the principal address will be made by Supreme Court Justice Page, who was chairman of the state commission that recently brought about the reorganization of the inferior criminal courts of New York and Buffalo.

New York state was one of the first states to have such a conference. The only other states known to have such gatherings are Massachusetts and Michigan. The first conference in New York state was called last year by the state probation commission. The arrangements for the coming conference are being made by a committee composed jointly of magistrates and of representatives of the state probation commission.

Senator Beveridge is also giving us the silence treatment.

SOME RECOLLECTIONS

Editor Times: A Fulton friend had informed me of the death of my boyhood's associate, Esmond, some days before the arrival of my paper containing the brief obituary. I know not how recent years have dealt with him, but of this I am sure had death overtaken "Dick" in those gala days of Old Falley Seminary he would have taken out of life one of the merriest youngsters who ever called John P. Griffin, "Professor." It was just pure, continuous, unqualified fun that bubbled perennially from an apparently exhausted source. Everybody liked "Dick" Esmond. I believe he had a longer Christian name, but was utterly useless save for cataloguing purposes and he was to all of us just "Dick." Nature cut him short, in the matter of stature and his friends followed Nature's suit in abbreviating his appellation, but if he was of shortened length, never think for one moment that he was in the least stunted in soul nor in what goes with it, a due sense of his importance as a boy and man. He had dignity enough when necessary, to make him a veritable "Little Corporal," for such was Napoleon when he impressed himself on the minds of his fellow soldiers of France. Our small had of the Seminary started in the 147th, enlisting August 22, 1862, as Corporal and next on the list is the name of Martin Schenck, who must have been almost as tall again as the boy, who in later years was to wear the title of "Major." He was in Captain Alexander Hulet's Company D. and George Sisson was First Lieutenant. How well I remember the hot day of early summer, 1863, when I went to the funeral of the last named in the Baptist church, Fulton, the officer, having died, May 13. It was no picnic party into which Corporal Esmond's regiment was led for, from Gettysburg to Five Forks, the Oswego County boys had their share of all there was in sight. At the first named battle their brigade was the first infantry on the field and there the regiment left 76 killed or mortally wounded. Out of 380 who entered the fight, only 75 came out unscathed. The 147th was one of the Fighting Regiments forever immortalized by Colonel Fox in his famous volume, and I love to think that the rollicking, mischievous friend of my boyhood was one of the bravest and best of the entire array. I have understood that his coolness in danger, his ceaseless activity soon won him positions where such qualities were appreciated and that he found his proper position as a staff officer. At any rate he attained his first Lieutenantcy, January 13, 1864, and the government later recognized his valiant worth by giving him the brevet rank of Captain and Major. What an alert, inspiring sight he was when he came home with his honors still fresh upon him. How all of us regretted that he was not inclined to accept the cadetship offered him at Annapolis, asking that the honor be conferred upon his brother, Titus. Suppose he had gone to the academy and had graduated, as we think he would and had worked his way to the highest places in the naval branch of the service, how his old Fulton friends would have shouted over the honors of "Admiral" Esmond, for such he had been sure to become. "Of all sad words of tongue or pen" etc. What more can I write? I had not seen him since the earliest days after the bloody struggle. Perhaps he had grown a bit more sedate, manlike, but he could laugh just as heartily then as in the earlier Sixties. He won his fame in the "Sixties" of the Century and he died in the Sixties of his age. For the sake of Auld Lang Syne, for all he was and did, may God bless him and ever keep his memory green. Is there one who knew him and loved him, to whom these words may come, who will not breathe a fervent "Amen."

I started with the thought of writing something about the brothers, Titus and Fred. But this, and what I would like to express concerning the excellent articles Comrade S. D. Gardner is giving on his experiences in the 110th, must wait until another in the 110th, must wait until another time. I am pleased that Comrade Cooper, now of Ohio, sends on his contribution to "Dick's" memory and I hope that Martin Schenck may feel inclined to do likewise.

Alfred S. Roe.
Worcester, Mass., Dec. 4, 1910.

Mr. McSweeney tells the Times that he never dreamed of so many fish as he saw on the banks in Boston; he believes that if they were laid side by side they would more than cover the county of Oswego. He also saw thousands of turkeys and they were bringing high prices in the market. One feature that impressed Mr. McSweeney was the public auction at which he saw hundreds of barrels of apples being auctioned for what they would bring, the price per barrel varying greatly. In Albany Mr. McSweeney attended sessions of the Supreme Court and was greatly impressed with the "brilliance" of the speeches he heard.

INFANTILE PARALYSIS

Special Appropriation for Investigation of Epidemic Paralysis

The subject of epidemic infantile paralysis was thoroughly discussed at the Health Officers' Conference recently held in Buffalo, and it was the unanimous opinion of those present that the Legislature should grant a special appropriation for a thorough investigation of the causes, and steps to be taken for the prevention of the disease.

For the past two or three years infantile paralysis has occurred epidemically over an ever-widening territory and with an increasing number of cases. It is estimated by Surgeon General Wyman that the records of 1910 will show upwards of 3,000 cases. Ten per cent are left with more or less permanent paralysis, so that many of the victims remain throughout life more or less dependent upon their families or upon the community for support.

Epidemic paralysis is undoubtedly a germ disease, although the germ has not yet been discovered. The infecting material is found in the discharges from the nose and throat, and the State Department of Health has ordered that the same sanitary precautions and quarantine regulations be observed with this disease as with diphtheria.

Backache, muscular pains, fever and sore throat have been recognized as early symptoms, but the disease is often not recognized until paralysis in the upper or lower extremities develops. In mild cases there may be no paralysis, and it is in this abortive type of the disease that the chief danger lies, because it is apt to pass unrecognized, the parent pays little attention to it and the physician is not called in. But the discharges from an abortive case are capable of infecting other people, especially children, and may give rise to fatal cases or to cases with serious paralysis.

It has been thought that there was some relation between the disease and the paralysis seen in chickens; it has been suggested that the disease is transmitted by flies and insects; street dust has been considered a causative factor; but Dr. W. H. Frost, of the Marine Hospital Service, who has been conducting an investigation in Iowa, does not consider that the relationship of any of them to the disease has been established.

Laboratory investigations have been going on for some time past at the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research in New York city. The State Department of Health now requires all cases to be reported to it on special blanks, and a study will be made of those records; but a field investigation should also be made by house to house inspections in infected districts to ascertain as far as possible the factors which favor the spread of the disease. As a rule epidemic paralysis is a disease of the summer months, but previous history leads one to expect that enough cases will appear from time to time during the winter to carry the disease through the cold season, and that it will break out again with increasing virulence under more favorable climatic conditions next year.

It is for this reason that the Health officers want the Legislature this winter to provide special funds which will allow the State Department of Health to perfect plans for a thorough field examination during the height of the epidemic season next year.

A JOKE BOOK

"A joke book is a very inexpensive gift that any one can make and is an excellent cure for the blues," says Mabel C. Rodgers in the Woman's Home Companion for December. "The covers may be made of mat or heavy cardboard with some kind of a humorous picture on the front. The pages are of plain paper with the clippings pasted on like an ordinary scrap-book. Jokes, funny sayings, short humorous sketches—anything that will provoke a laugh—may be put in the book. A cheerful heart doeth good like a medicine, and a book like this will bring an abundance of cheer and laughter."

"If Chicago succeeds in checking its wave of crime as it has now started out to do, when it finishes we should like to borrow the check for a while," says the Indianapolis News. But the chances are unfortunately that the check will have proved "no good."

SHOP EARLY

"For several years an effort has been made to lessen the extra pressure of work which during the holiday season falls on the salespeople in shops," says Margaret E. Sangster in the Woman's Home Companion for December. "On those who deliver goods, on the postoffice employees and in the express offices the country through. Never have I seen young women so tired, haggard and dragged out as are those who serve the public in the weeks preceding Christmas. The hours at that time are much longer than usual, and the endeavor is to meet the demands of anxious and hurried customers who do not know what they want, and are bewildered amid the variety of tempting articles displayed."

"Physically and mentally the clerks, messengers, cashiers and every one concerned in mercantile pursuits in the holiday shopping season are worn to shreds. Much of their fatigue might be prevented were buyers considerate, and if the caution come too late for this year, will not those who need it make a note for another season? Books and packages sent by mail and gifts transmitted by express as well as the vast bulk of Christmas correspondence should stretch over December instead of being congested in the two or three days before Christmas."

Five Years

of Heart Trouble Cured by Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy

"Before I began taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy I had been suffering from heart trouble for over five years. I had pains in my left side, and under my shoulder blade, could not sleep on the left side, and was so short of breath the least exertion would bring on the most distressing palpitation. I had scarcely taken a half bottle of the Heart Remedy before I could see a marked change in my condition. When I had taken six bottles I was cured."

MRS. C. C. GORKEY, Northfield, Va.

If there is fluttering or palpitation it is an indication of a weakness of the nerves and muscles of the heart. It is not necessarily diseased—just weak from over-work. The heart may be weak just the same as the eyes, stomach or other organs. You can make a weak heart strong by taking Dr. Miles' Heart Remedy. Get a bottle from your druggist, take it according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

A CHRISTMAS PRESENT THAT MEANS SOMETHING

There is one especially good thing about a Christmas present of 'The Youth's Companion.' It shows that the giver thought enough of you to give you something worth while. It is easy to choose something costing a great deal more which is absolutely useless, but to choose a present costing only $1.75 that will provide a long year's entertainment, and the uplifting companionship of the wise and great, is another matter. There is one present, however, which does just that—The Youth's Companion.

If you want to know whether it is appropriate or welcome, just visit the home of some Companion subscriber on Companion day.

Do not choose any Christmas present until you have examined 'The Companion.' We will send you free sample copies and the beautiful Prospectus for 1911, telling something of how The Companion has recently been enlarged and improved.

The one to whom you give the subscription will receive free all the numbers of 1910 issued after the money is received. Also The Companion's Art Calendar for 1911, lithographed in thirteen colors and gold. These will be sent to reach the subscriber Christmas morning, if desired.

You, too, as giver of the subscription, will receive a copy of the calendar.

The legend of the flood as told by the Moros is as follows:

"When the forty days and nights of rain came No and his family got into a box. One pair of each sort of bird and beast also came in. Men who were busy with their ordinary occupations and did not enter the box were overtaken by the flood. Those who ran to the mountains became monkeys; those who ran to the water, fish. The Chinaman changed to a hornbill. A woman who was eating the fruit of a seaweed and would not stop was changed into a fish called a dugong, and her limbs can still be seen under its skin."

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

Oswego, Dec. 6. — The Board of Supervisors by a vote of eighteen to thirteen decided last evening to make the bank deposit resolution a special order for Tuesday, December 13. The motion making it a special order was introduced by Supervisor Hartnett after an amendment offered by Supervisor Crimmins of Oswego, which provided for taking care of all the National banks in the county on the following basis: First and Second National banks of Oswego, 25 per cent. each; First National bank and Citizens' National bank of Fulton, 15 per cent. each, and the Mexico and Pulaski National banks 10 per cent. each.

The Oswego City members of the Board expressed themselves very emphatically against the action taken Friday and admitted they had made a mistake in making such a resolution a party measure as it was a piece of discrimination which was sure to react politically, personally and in every other way.

The feeling is growing that the County Treasurer should be permitted to deposit the receipts of his office in any bank he desires. The banks say there is no money in the business and that is all the more reason why the County Treasurer should not be tied up by the Board but should be allowed to suit his own convenience. The Board of Supervisors require the Treasurer to give a bond of $50,000 and at the same time they want to tell him where to put the money received by him. Lawyers say that in case of a bank failure under such circumstance the Supervisors would not be able to collect a dollar from the County Treasurer.

Congressman Elect Mott, County Treasurer Elect Kaudt and Dr. W. G. Babcock were extended the privileges of the floor and made short talks.

Congressman elect Mott congratulated the members over the smooth manner in which the business of the Board was conducted. He said "he would be glad to be of service to all the members of the Board while in Washington."

Supervisor Rowe offered the following resolutions: $100, levy for the maintenance of road 539; $51.28, town's share of sinking fund for road between Fulton and Volney Center; $60.53, town's share of road 538 and $20 for Memorial day.

The clerk read a report from Frank H. French, County Sealer of Weights and Measures, in which he asked for a hearing. Supervisor Gayer's resolution that he appear before the board next Monday was adopted.

Oswego, Dec. 6. — The Board met at 11:30 o'clock this morning.

Supervisor Jackson moved a levy of $574.59 on Palermo as per vote of town board for town abstract.

Supervisor Pierce moved that Senators Cobb and Assemblyman Sweet be authorized to use their influence to have adopted an amendment to the county clerk's law increasing the salary of Lewis J. Coulter, court clerk, from $720 to $860 per year.

Supervisor Hartnett moved that the resolution be made a special order for Friday, December 9.

Supervisor Ouderkerk presented a report showing the bonded indebtedness of the town of Granby for bridge bonds to be $24,000 with principal and interest due amounting to $1,360. Received.

The annual report of the inspection by the State of Mexico County House was read. This flattering report to Superintendent Stone was read and ordered filed.

An adjournment was taken until Thursday at 9:30 o'clock.

HOSPITAL PROPERTY SOLD

The Common Council met in the City Hall on Wednesday at 2 o'clock for the purpose of selling to the highest bidder the property acquired a few years ago for hospital site purposes. City Judge Fanning was the auctioneer and bids on the property as a whole were first asked for. Attorney G. S. Piper offered $5,500 for the lot, or $50 more than was originally paid for the property.

The property was then broken into parcels and sold as follows: Lot No. 2, which is vacant was bid in by F. E. Bache for $815. Lot No. 3, the Peter Schenck place, also went to Mr. Bache for $1,250. Mr. Piper took lots 6 and 7 with the George Wood house for $2,000, and the Henderson, Thompson Co. bid in 4 and 5 without right of way for a driveway over them at $1,700. They also bid in Lot 8 for $600.

The entire amount paid for the property was $8,165, of which $1,600 goes to the Ed. Schenck estate which parcel was never deeded to the city.

The terms of the sale were 5 per cent. of amount bid on date of sale and remainder within five days. The money will go into the general city fund.

DEATHS

Anna Bell Cavalier, aged 29, wife of Mr. Edward Cowley, died on December 1, at the home in Oswego. The funeral services were held on Saturday from St. Paul's church.

John, aged 12, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Fink, died on Wednesday evening from the effect of injuries received on Thanksgiving day when he fell from a box car standing in the O. & W. freight yards and struck on the track on his head. The parents, a sister and two brothers survive.

United States Express Agent Charles E. Lockrow was called to Newport, R. I., last week by the death of his mother, Mrs. William H. Durfee, aged 60, who had been ill a long time. Beside the husband, three sons survive, Messrs. Charles E., of this city, J. A., of Albany, and H. J., of Newport, R. I.

The death of Mrs. Almira L. Watson, aged 79, occurred on Tuesday night at the home of her daughter, Mrs. George W. Brooker, in First street, after years of ill health. The funeral services were held from the late home on Friday afternoon at 3 o'clock and burial was made in Mt. Auburn. The immediate survivors are the daughter, Mrs. Brooker, with whom she made her home, and one sister, Mrs. Maria Chandler, of Los Angeles, Calif.

The death of William M. Hinsdale, aged 52, which occurred without warning at his home on West First street on Monday afternoon, came with shocking force upon his many friends in this city and vicinity. While he was the picture of health he had not been at all well for two years but as late as Saturday he was about the business section as usual. On Monday he complained of severe pain in the abdomen and the family physician, Dr. D. E. Lake, was called. Appreciating the gravity of the case Drs. Cusack and Hall were called in consultation, but all found that death was inevitable, a blood clot caused by a diseased heart, had formed in a large artery in the abdomen. The deceased had an appointment with Mr. H. P. Allen at 4 o'clock on Monday and as Mr. Allen was enroute to keep the appointment he learned that the summons had come for his friend. Mr. Hinsdale was born in Pompey, but for many years he had been a successful and prominent farmer in Granby, where the widow still owns a large farm stocked with blooded cattle. About ten years ago he purchased a home in Oswego Falls and has since made this city his home. During the first city administration he was city clerk of Fulton under Mayor J. A. Foster. He was prominent in Grange circles; was a member of Hiram Lodge, F. & A. M., and of Neantawanta Lodge, I. O. O. F. For several years he has been president of the Milk Producer's Association and has been prominent for a long time in the Oswego County Agricultural Society, of which body he was a director. He was perhaps one of the best known residents in this section of the county. The funeral services will be held from the late home on Thursday morning at 10:30 o'clock, the Rev. York officiating, and burial will be made in Mt. Auburn. The immediate survivors are the widow, to whom the deepest sympathy is extended; two sons, William of Sacramento, Calif., and Samuel of this city, and two sisters, Mrs. W. T. Scheide of Titusville, Pa., and Mrs. E. H. Clapp of Graton.

Filony, aged 68, wife of Mr. Samuel MacCordy, died on Monday at the family home in Third street after a long period of invalidism following a stroke of paralysis. On Thursday a second stroke came, from the effects of which she did not rally. The funeral services will be held on Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock from the family home, 253 S. Third street and Rev. C. G. Wadsworth, assisted by Rev. F. A. Miller, officiating. Burial will be made in Mt. Auburn. The immediate survivors are the husband, six daughters, Mrs. O. O. Hannis, Mrs. N. H. Kimball, Miss Clara MacCordy and Miss Hazel B. MacCordy of this city; Mrs. Daniel Wedman, Rochester; Mrs. E. H. Beebe, Syracuse; four sons, Samuel P. MacCordy, Amsterdam; F. E. MacCordy, Fulton; C. A. MacCordy and H. R. MacCordy, Syracuse; and two sisters, Mrs. Joseph Lampkin, Amsterdam, and Mrs. Kate Hogan of Rochester, five grandchildren and one great grand child.

TUBERCULOSIS EXHIBIT

The Tuberculosis Exhibit which was held in the City Hall early in the week, was formally opened on Sunday afternoon by Dr. E. J. Cusack. A large number attended the exhibit on each of the days and considerable interest was manifested in the addresses. The exhibits certainly do a vast amount of good in an educational sense, and the pictures tell a story to the eye that the brain might not be able to grasp in words.

When it is known that during the past year 408 deaths have occurred in Oswego county alone from tuberculosis is the importance of the exhibit here can be imagined. On Monday afternoon a lecture was given in the High school to the students in which many charts were used. The exhibit was under the charge of Dr.

The men's meeting held in the Presbyterian church on Friday evening was a decided success, over a hundred men being present and listening with interest to the scholarly presentation of the topic, "The present political crisis in England," by Rev. G. W. Wellburn. The speaker was preeminently qualified to speak intelligently and feelingly upon the subject as he has for years been a student of conditions and on the ground. He brought out many most enlightening points and presented even the dullest facts in a most entertaining manner.

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor of the Presbyterian church will hold a social in the church parlors on Friday evening, December 9, at 7:30 o'clock. All are cordially invited to attend.

TAFT'S MESSAGE UP TO CONGRESS

thing over $10,000,000 for the fortification of the canal.

Against the estimates of expenditures, $380,494,913.12, we have estimated receipts for next year $680,000,000, making a probable surplus of ordinary receipts over ordinary expenditures of about $300,000,000, or, taking into account the estimates for the Panama canal, which are $56,920,947.60 and which will ultimately be paid in bonds, it will leave a deficit for the next year of about $7,000,000. If congress shall concur in the fortification of the canal, the cost of the fortifications is about $18,000,000. Should there be no appropriations this year for fortifications then there would be, even including the Panama canal appropriation, a surplus of about $12,000,000.

It is not essential to the preventing of smuggling that customs districts should be increased in number. The violation of the customs laws can be quite as easily prevented and much more economically by the reorganization of service and by the use of the special agent traveling force of the treasury department.

Very great improvements have been made in respect to the mint and assay offices. Dismissed appropriations have been asked for those whose continuance is unnecessary, and this year's estimate of expenses is $329,000 less than two years ago.

In the bureau of engraving and printing great economies have been effected. Unnecessary divisions have been abolished, with the result of saving $440,000 this year in the total expenses of the bureau despite increased business.

Revenue.

As the treasury department is the one through which the income of the government is collected and its expenditures are disbursed this seems a proper place to consider the operation of the existing tariff bill, which became a law Aug. 6, 1909. As an income producing measure the existing tariff bill has never been exceeded by any customs bill in the history of the country.

The corporation excise tax, proportioned to the net income of every business corporation in the country, has worked well. The tax has been easily collected, its prompt payment indicates that the incidence of the tax has not been heavy. It offers, moreover, an opportunity for knowledge by the government of the general condition and business of all corporations, and that means by far the most important part of the business of the country. In the original act provision was made for the publication of returns. This provision was subsequently amended by congress and the matter left to the regulation of the president. I have directed the issue of the needed regulations and have made it possible for the public generally to know from an examination of the record the returns of all corporations the stock of which is listed on any public stock exchange or is offered for sale to the general public by advertisement or otherwise.

The returns of those corporations whose stock is not so listed or offered for sale are directed to be open to the inspection and examination of creditors and stockholders of the corporation whose record is sought. The returns of all corporations are subject to the inspection of any government officer or to the examination of any court, in which the return made by the corporation is relevant and competent evidence.

The Payne Tariff Act.

The schedules of the rates of duty in the Payne tariff act have been subjected to a great deal of criticism, some of it just more of it unfounded, and to much misrepresentation. The act was adopted in pursuance of a declaration by the party which is responsible for it that a customs bill should be a tariff for the protection of home industries, the measure of the protection to be the difference between the cost of producing the imported article abroad and the cost of producing it at home, together with such addition to that difference as might give a reasonable profit to the home producer.

The basis for the criticism of this tariff is that in respect to a number of the schedules the declared measure was not followed, but a higher difference retained or inserted by way of undue discrimination in favor of certain industries and manufactures.

Little, if any, of the criticism of the tariff has been directed against the protective principle above stated, but the main body of the criticism has been based on the charge that the attempt to conform to the measure of protection was not honestly and sincerely adhered to.

Tariff Board.

The time in which the tariff was prepared undoubtedly was so short as to make it impossible for the congress and its experts to acquire the information necessary strictly to conform to the declared measure. In order to avoid criticism of this kind in the future and for the purpose of more nearly conforming to the party promise congress at its last session made provision at my request for the continuance of a board created under the authority of the maximum and minimum clause of the tariff bill and authorized this board to expend the money appropriated under my direction for the ascertainment of the cost of production at home and abroad of the various articles included in the schedules of the tariff. The tariff board thus appointed and authorized has been diligent in preparing itself for the necessary investigations. The hope of those who have advocated the use of this board for tariff purposes is that the question of the rate of a duty imposed shall become more of a business question and less of a political question, to be ascertained by experts of long training and accurate knowledge. The halt in business and the shock to business due to the announcement that a new tariff bill is to be prepared and put in operation will be avoided by treating the schedules one by one as occasion shall arise for a change in the rates of each and only after a report upon the schedule by the tariff board competent to make such report.

It is not likely that the board will be able to make a report during the present session of congress on any of the schedules, because a proper examination involves an enormous amount of detail and a great deal of care, but I hope to be able at the opening of the new congress, or at least during the session of that congress, to bring to its attention the facts in regard to those schedules in the present tariff that may prove to need amendment.

The carrying out of this plan, of course, involves the full co-operation of congress in limiting the consideration in tariff matters to one schedule at a time, because if a proposed amendment to a tariff bill is to involve a complete consideration of all the schedules and another revision then we shall only repeat the evil from which the business of this country has in times past suffered most grievously by stagnation and uncertainty, pending a resettlement of a law affecting all business directly or indirectly, and the effect of which no wise business man would ignore in new projects and new investments.

The inquiries which the members of the tariff board made during the last summer into the methods pursued by other governments with reference to the fixing of tariffs and the determination of their effect upon trade show that each government maintains an office or bureau, the officers and employees of which have made their life work the study of tariff matters, of foreign and home prices and cost of articles imported and the effect of the tariff upon trade, so that whenever a change is thought to be necessary in the tariff law this office is the source of the most reliable information as to the propriety of the change and its effect.

I am strongly convinced that we need in this government just such an office and that it can be secured by making the tariff board already appointed a permanent tariff commission, with such duties, powers and emoluments as it may seem wise to congress to give. It has been proposed to enlarge the board from three to five. The present number is convenient, but I do not know that an increase of two members would be objectionable.

I recommend that congress establish a commission to determine as early as practicable a comprehensive policy for the organization, mobilization and administration of the regular army, the organized militia and the volunteer forces in the event of war.

Need For Additional Officers.

One of the great difficulties in the prompt organization and mobilization of militia and volunteer forces is the absence of competent officers of the rank of captain to teach the new army, by the unit of the company, the business of being soldiers and of taking care of themselves so as to render effective service. This need of army officers can only be supplied by provisions of law authorizing the appointment of a greater number of army officers than are needed to supply the commands of regular army troops now enlisted in the service.

In order that the militia of each state should be properly drilled and made more like the regular army, regular army officers should be detailed to assist the adjutant general of each state in the supervision of the state militia. But this is impossible unless provision is made by congress for a very considerable increase in the number of company and field officers of the army.

Fortifications.

I have directed that the estimates for appropriation for the improvement of coast defenses in the United States should be reduced to a minimum, while those for the completion of the needed fortifications at Corregidor, in the Philippine Islands, and at Pearl Harbor, in the Hawaiian Islands, should be expedited as much as possible.

Philippine Islands.

During the last summer at my request the secretary of war visited the Philippine Islands and has described his trip in his report. He found the islands in a state of tranquillity and growing prosperity, due largely to the change in the tariff laws which has opened the markets of America to the products of the Philippines and has opened the Philippine markets to American manufactures.

Panama Canal.

At the instance of Colonel Goethals, the army engineer officer in charge of the work on the Panama canal, I have just made a visit to the isthmus to inspect the work done and to consult with him on the ground as to certain problems which are likely to arise in the near future. The progress of the work is most satisfactory. If no unexpected obstacle presents itself the canal will be completed well within the time fixed by Colonel Goethals to wit, Jan. 1, 1915—and within the estimate of cost, $375,000,000.

Among questions arising for present solution is the decision whether the canal shall be fortified. I have already stated to the congress that I strongly favor fortification, and I now reiterate this opinion and ask your consideration of the subject in the light of the report already before you made by a competent board.

If in our discretion we believe modern fortifications to be necessary to the adequate protection and policing of the canal, then it is our duty to construct them. We have built the canal. It is our property. By convention we have indicated our desire for and indeed undertaken its universal and equal use. It is also well known that one of the chief objects in the construction of the canal has been to increase the military effectiveness of our navy.

Failure to fortify the canal would leave the attainment of both these aims in the position of rights and obligations which we should be powerless to enforce and which could never in any other way be absolutely safeguarded against a desperate and irresponsible enemy.

In determining what the tolls in the canal should be we certainly ought not to insist that for a good many years to come they should amount to enough to pay the interest on the investment of $400,000,000 which the United States has made in the construction of the canal. We ought not to do this, first, because the benefits to be derived by the United States from this expenditure are not to be measured solely by a return upon the investment.

My own impression is that the tolls ought not to exceed $1 per net ton. On Jan. 1, 1911, the tolls in the Suez canal are to be 7 francs and 25 centimes for one net ton by Suez canal measurement, which is a modification of Danube measurement. A dollar a ton will secure under the figures above a gross annual income from the Panama canal of nearly $7,000,000. The cost of maintenance and operation is estimated to exceed $3,000,000.

The next question that arises is as to the maintenance, management and general control of the canal after its completion. It should be premised that it is an essential part of our navy establishment to have the coal, oil and other ship supplies, a drydock and repair shops conveniently located with reference to naval vessels passing through the canal. Now, if the government is to furnish these conveniences to the navy, and they are conveniences equally required by commercial vessels, there would seem to be strong reasons why the government should take over and include in its management the furnishing not only to the navy, but to the public, drydock and repair shop facilities and the sale of coal, oil and other ship supplies.

The maintenance of a lock canal of this enormous size in a sparsely populated country and in the tropics, where the danger from disease is always present, requires a large and complete and well trained organization with full police powers, exercising the utmost care.

I cannot close this reference to the canal without suggesting as a wise amendment to the interstate commerce law a provision prohibiting interstate commerce railroads from owning or controlling ships engaged in the trade through the Panama canal. I believe such a provision may be needed to save to the people of the United States the benefits of the competition in trade between the eastern and western seaboard which this canal was constructed to secure.

Department of Justice.

I am glad to say that under the appropriations made for the department of justice the attorney general has so improved the organization that a vast amount of litigation of a civil and criminal character has been disposed of during the current year. This will explain the necessity for slightly increasing the estimates for the expenses of the department. His report shows the recoveries made on behalf of the government, of duties fraudulently withheld, public lands improperly patented, fines and penalties for trespass, prosecutions and convictions under the anti-trust law and prosecutions under interstate commerce law.

I invite especial attention to the prosecutions under the federal law of the so called "bucket shops" and of those schemes to defraud in which the use of the mail is an essential part of the fraudulent conspiracy, prosecutions which have saved ignorant and weak members of the public and are saving them millions of dollars.

The violations of the anti-trust law present perhaps the most important litigation before the department, and the number of cases filed shows the activity of the government in enforcing that statute.

Judicial Procedure.

One great crying need in the United States is cheapening the cost of litigation by simplifying judicial procedure and expediting final judgment. Under present conditions the poor man is at a woeful disadvantage in a legal contest with a corporation or a rich opponent. The necessity for the reform exists both in United States courts and in all state courts. In order to bring it about, however, it naturally falls to the general government by its example to furnish a model to all states. A legislative commission appointed by joint resolution of congress to revise the procedure in the United States courts has as yet made no report.

I am strongly convinced that the best method of improving judicial procedure at law is to empower the supreme court to do it through the medium of the rules of the court, as in equity. This is the way in which it has been done in England.

Relief of Supreme Court From Unnecessary Appeals.

No man ought to have as a matter of right a review of his case by the supreme court. He should be satisfied by one hearing before a court of first instance and one review by a court of appeal. The proper and chief business of the supreme court, and especially the supreme court of the United States, is in the cases which come before it so to expound the law and especially the fundamental law—the constitution—as to furnish precedents for the inferior courts in future litigation and for the executive officers in the construction of statutes and the performance of their legal duties. Therefore any provision for review of cases by the supreme court that cast upon that court the duty of passing on questions of evidence and the construction of particular forms of instruments, like indictments or wills or contracts, decisions not of general application or importance, merely clog and burden the court and render more difficult its higher function, which makes it so important a part of the framework of our government. The supreme court is now carrying an unnecessary burden of appeals of this kind, and I earnestly urge that it be removed.

Judicial Salaries.

I further recommend to congress the passage of the bill now pending for the increase in the salaries of the federal judges, by which the chief justice of the supreme court shall receive $17,500 and the associate justices $17,000, the circuit judges constituting the circuit court of appeals shall receive $10,000 and the district judges $9,000. The positions they occupy ought to be filled by men who have shown the greatest ability in their professional work at the bar, and it is the poorest economy possible for the government to pay salaries so low for judicial service as not to be able to command the best talent of the legal profession in every part of the country.

Wiping Out of Postal Deficit.

For many years there has been a deficit in the operations of the post-office department which has been met by appropriation from the treasury. The appropriation estimated for last year from the treasury over and above the receipts of the department was $17,500,000. I am glad to record the fact that of that $17,500,000 estimated for last year $11,500,000 were saved and returned to the treasury. It is gratifying to report that the reduction in the deficit has been accomplished without any curtailment of postal facilities.

Upon the recommendation of the postmaster general I have included in the classified service all assistant postmasters, and I believe that this giving a secure tenure to those who are the most important subordinates of postmasters will add much to the efficiency of their offices and an economical administration.

The Franchising Privilege.

The franchising privilege in which the franking privilege is now being used by the several federal services and by congress has laid it open to serious abuses.

Parcels Post.

With respect to the parcels post, I respectfully recommend its adoption on all rural delivery routes and that eleven pounds, the international limit, be made the limit of carriage in such post. The postoffice department has a great plant and a great organization, reaching into the most remote hamlet of the United States, and with this machinery it is able to do a great many things economically that if a new organization were necessary it would be impossible to do without extravagant expenditure. That is the reason why the postal savings bank can be carried on at a small additional cost and why it is possible to incorporate at a very inconsiderable expense a parcels post in the rural delivery system.

Peary.

I unite with the secretary in the recommendation that an appropriation be made to construct a suitable crypt at Annapolis for the custody of the remains of John Paul Jones.

The unparalleled achievement of Peary in reaching the north pole, April 6, 1909, approved by critical examination of the most expert scientists, has added to the distinction of our navy, to which he belongs, and reflects credit upon his country. His unique success has received generous acknowledgment from scientific bodies and institutions of learning in Europe and America. I recommend fitting recognition by congress of the great achievement of Robert Edwin Peary.

For Eight Hour Day.

It seems to me from the past history that the government has been committed to a policy of encouraging the limitation of the day's work to eight hours in all works of construction initiated by itself, and it seems to me illogical to maintain a difference between government work done on government soil and government work done in a private establishment.

Workmen's Compensation.

In view of the keen, widespread interest now felt in the United States in a system of compensation for industrial accidents to supplement our present tort remedies to supplement our present tort remedies to supplement our present tort remedies, I recommend that congress should recognize by the appointment of a commission, I recommend that the international congress on industrial insurance be invited to hold its meeting in 1913 in Washington and that an appropriation of $10,000 be made to cover the necessary expenses of organizing and carrying on the meeting.

Safety Appliances and Provisions.

The protection of railroad employees from personal injury is a subject of the highest importance and demands continuing attention.

Negro Exposition.

I also renew my recommendation that steps be taken looking to the holding of a negro exposition in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the issuing by Mr. Lincoln of the emancipation proclamation.

Conservation.

Nothing can be more important in the matter of conservation than the treatment of our forest lands. Speaking generally, the government has reserved of the existing forests about 70 per cent of all the timberlands of the government. Within these forests (including 28,000,000 acres in two forests in Alaska) are 192,000,000 acres, of which 165,000,000 acres are in the United States proper and include within their boundaries something like 22,000,000 acres that belong to the states or to private individuals. We have, then, excluding Alaska forests, a total of about 144,000,000 acres of forests belonging to the government which are being treated in accord with the principles of scientific forestry.

The law now prohibits the reservation of any more forest lands in Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Colorado and Wyoming except by act of congress. I am informed by the department of agriculture that the government owns other tracts of timberland in these states which should be included in the forest reserves. I recommend to congress that the limitation herein imposed be repealed. In the present forest reserves there are lands which are not properly forest land and which ought to be subject to homestead entry.

Coal Lands.

The next subject, and one most important for your consideration, is the disposition of the coal lands in the United States and in Alaska. At the beginning of this administration there were classified coal lands in the United States amounting to 5,478,000 acres, and there were withdrawn from entry for purposes of classification 17,867,000 acres. Since that time there have been withdrawn by my order from entry for classification 78,977,745 acres, making a total withdrawal of 96,844,745 acres. Meanwhile of the acres thus withdrawn 10,061,889 have been classified and found not to contain coal and have been restored to agricultural entry and 4,726,091 acres have been classified as coal lands, while 79,956,239 acres remain withdrawn from entry and await classification. In addition 897,000 acres have been classified as coal lands without prior withdrawal, thus increasing the classified coal lands to 10,428,372 acres.

The question as to how great an area ought to be included in a lease to one individual or corporation is not free from difficulty, but in view of the fact that the government retains control as owner I think there might be some liberality in the amount leased and that 2,500 acres would not be too great a maximum. The leases should only be granted after advertisement and public competition.

The secretary of the interior thinks there are difficulties in the way of leasing public coal lands. I entirely approved his stating at length in his report the objections in order that the whole subject may be presented to congress, but after a full consideration I favor a leasing system and recommend it.

The needed oil and gas law is essentially a leasing law. In their natural occurrence oil and gas cannot be measured in terms of acres, like coal, and it follows that exclusive title to these products can normally be secured only after they reach the surface. Oil should be disposed of as a commodity in terms of barrels of transportable product rather than in acres of real estate.

Water Power Rates.

The water power sites subject is one that calls for new legislation. It has been thought that there was danger of combination to obtain possession of all the power sites and to unite them under one control. Whatever the evidence of this or lack of it, at present we have had enough experience to know that combination would be profitable, and the control of a great number of power sites would enable the holders or owners to raise the price of power at will within certain sections, and the temptation, would promptly attract investors, and the danger of monopoly and extortion would not be a remote one.

However this may be, it is the plain duty of the government to see to it that in the utilization and development of all this immense amount of water power conditions shall be imposed that will prevent extortionate charges, which are the usual accompaniment of monopoly.

NEW "CHRISTMAS CAROL"

Not by Charles Dickens, but an In-cipient Parody on His Famous Story. Barley was dead to begin with. He was as dead as a doornail, which must be going some in the dead line, as people have been using a doornail as a simile of death for several centuries. But Smoodge was alive and kicking.

Smoodge kicked particularly against Christmas presents. He didn't believe in Christmas presents. Barley, his old partner, dead these seven years, hadn't believed in Christmas presents either. When Smoodge shut up his warehouse and went home on Christmas eve he lived in lodgings that had been Barley's—the doornail assumed an expression which he had never noted there before. The head of that dead doornail resolved itself into the head of Barley.

"Hey, Jacob, I thought you were dead!" cried Smoodge. "So I am, Ebenezer," replied the vilitized doornail, "but I've come back to warn you that you will be visited at midnight by three ghosts, one after the other. So long, Eh!"

I also renew my recommendation

Barley's ghost again became a dead doornail. Smoodge went to bed and promptly, at midnight, was awakened by an apparition. It was the first of the three spirits. It seemed to crawl out from under his bed. It danced on the footboard of the bed.

"I am the Ghost of Christmas Present Past," said the spirit. "You look to me like one of those slippers my niece gave me last year," said Smoodge.

"You win," said the ghost and vanished.

Presently the second spirit arrived, doing a merry dance over the washstand.

"You look to me like another slipper," said Smoodge.

"I am the Ghost of Christmas Present Present," said the spirit.

"Ha, I see," said Smoodge. "You're one of the slippers my niece is going to give me this year."

Whereat Spirit No. 2 smiled and vanished.

In a jiffy the third of the promised spirits came in. It jumped upon the bed and stamped Smoodge in the face. "I'm on," said Smoodge; "you're another slipper."

"I am the Ghost of Christmas Present Future," said the spirit sepulchral-ly.

"Yes, I know," remarked Smoodge. "My niece will present you and your mate to me next Christmas. Because I'm an old man she never sends me anything but slippers. But these ghostly visits have taught me a lesson. Hereafter I'll be a better man. I'll give my niece a Chanticleer hat instead of the usual pair of gloves, and maybe next time she'll give me a silk topper."

THE THING'S THE PLAY

Story That a Reporter Failed to Find Funny

By O. HENRY

Copyright, 1910, by Doubleday, Page & Co.

Being acquainted with a newspaper reporter who had a couple of free passes, I got to see the performance a few nights ago at one of the popular vaudeville houses.

One of the numbers was a violin solo by a striking looking man, not much past forty, but with very gray, thick hair.

"There was a story about that chap a month or two ago," said the reporter. "They gave me the assignment. It was to run a column and was to be on the extremely light and joking order. The old man seems to like the funny touch I give to local happenings. Oh, yes, I'm working on a farce comedy now. Well, I went down to the house and got all the details, but I certainly fell down on that job. I went back and turned in a comic writup of an east-side funeral instead. Why? Oh, I couldn't seem to get hold of it with my funny books somehow. Maybe you could make a one act tragedy out of it for a certain raiser. I'll give you the details."

After the performance my friend the reporter recited to me the facts over the Wurzburger.

"I see no reason," said I when he had concluded, "why that shouldn't make a rattling good funny story. Those three people couldn't have acted in a more absurd and preposterous manner if they had been real actors in a real theater. I'm really afraid that all the stage is a world, anyhow, and all the players merely men and women. 'The thing's the play,' is the way I quote Mr. Shakespeare."

"Try it," said the reporter.

"I will," said I, and I did, to show him how he could have made a humorous column of it for his paper.

There stands a house near Abingdon square. On the ground floor there has been for twenty-five years a little store where toys and notions and stationery are sold.

One night twenty years ago there was a wedding in the rooms above the store. The Widow Mayo owned the house and store. Her daughter Helen was married to Frank Barry. John Delaney was best man. Helen was eighteen and a belle of the lower west side.

Frank Barry and John Delaney were prominent young beaux of the same side and bosom friends, whom you expected to turn upon each other every time the curtain went up. Both had made a great race for Helen's hand. When Frank won John shook his hand and congratulated him—honestly, he did.

After the ceremony Helen ran upstairs to put on her hat. She was getting married in a traveling dress.

Then there was a rattle of the fire escape, and into her room jumps the mad and infatuated John Delaney.

IN STALKING THE BRIDEGROOM.

with a damp cloth drooping upon his forehead, and made violent and reprehensible love to his lost one, entreating her to flee or fly with him.

It would have carried Blaney off his feet to see Helen repulse him. With blinding and scornful eyes she fairly withered him by demanding whatever he meant by speaking to respectable people that way.

In a few moments she had him going. The manliness that had possessed him departed. He bowed low and said something about "irresistible impulse" and "forever carry in his heart the memory of"—and she suggested that he catch the first fire escape going down.

"I will away," said John Delaney, "to the furthestmost parts of the earth. I cannot remain near you and know that you are another's."

"For goodness sake, get out," said Helen. "Somebody might come in."

He knelt upon one knee, and she extended him a white hand that he might give it a farewell kiss.

And then of course—how did you guess it?—the door opened and in stalked the bridegroom, jealous of slow, tying himself off.

The farewell kiss was imprinted upon Helen's hand and out of the window and down the fire escape sprang John Delaney, Africa bound.

A little slow music, if you please—faint violin, just a breath in the clarinet and a touch of the cello. Imagine the scene. Frank, white hot, with the cry of a man wounded to death bursting from him; Helen, rushing and clinging to him, trying to explain. He catches her wrists and tears them from his shoulders—once, twice, thrice he sways her this way and that—the stage manager will show you how—and throws her from him to the floor—a huddled, crushed, moaning thing. Never, he cries, will he look upon her face again, and rushes from the house through the staring groups of astonished guests.

And now, because it is the thing instead of the play, the audience must stroll out into the real lobby of the world and marry, die, grow gray, rich, poor, happy or sad during the intermission of twenty years which must precede the rising of the curtain again.

Mrs. Barry inherited the shop and the house. At thirty-eight she could have bested many an eighteen-year old at a beauty show on points and general results. Only a few people remembered her wedding comedy, but she made of it no secret.

One day a middle aged, money making lawyer, who bought his legal cap and ink of her, asked her across the counter to marry him.

"I'm really much obliged to you," said Helen cheerfully, "but I married another man twenty years ago. He was more a goose than a man, but I think I love him yet. I have never seen him since about half an hour after the ceremony. Was it copying ink that you wanted or just writing find?"

The lawyer bowed over the counter with old time grace and left a respectful kiss on the back of her hand. Helen sighed. Parting salutes, however romantic, may be overdone. Here she was at thirty-eight, beautiful and admired, and all that she seemed to have got from her lovers were reproaches and adieus.

Business languished, and she hung out a "Room to Let" card. Two large rooms on the third floor were prepared for desirable tenants.

One day came Ramonti, the violinist, and engaged the front room above.

Ramonti, with his still youthful face, his dark eyebrows, his distinguished head of gray hair and his artist's temperament—revealed in his light, gay and sympathetic manner—was a welcome tenant in the old house near Abingdon square.

Helen lived on the floor above the store. The architecture of it was singular and quaint. The hall was large and almost square. Up one side of it and then across the end of it ascended an open stairway to the floor above. This hall space she had furnished as a sitting room and office combined. There she kept her desk and wrote her business letters, and there she sat at evenings by a warm fire and a bright red light and sewed or read. Ramonti found the atmosphere so agreeable that he spent much time there, describing to Mrs. Barry the wonders of Paris, where he had studied with a particularly notorious and noisy fiddler.

Next comes lodger No. 2, a handsome, melancholy man in the early forties, with a brown, mysterious beard and strangely pleading, haunting eyes. He, too, found the society of Helen a desirable thing. With the eyes of Romeo and Othello's tongue, he charmed her with tales of distant climes and wooed her by respectful inquiries.

From the first Helen felt a marvelous and compelling thrill in the presence of this man. His voice somehow took her swiftly back to the days of her youth's romance. This feeling grew, and she gave way to it, and it led her to an instinctive belief that he had been a factor in that romance. And then with a woman's reasoning (oh, yes, they do, sometimes) she leaped over common syllogisms and theory and logic and was sure that her husband had come back to her. For she saw in his eyes love, which no woman can mistake, and a thousand tons of regret and remorse, which aroused pity, which is perilously near to love requited, which is the sine qua non in the house that Jack built.

But she made no sign. A husband who steps around the corner for twenty years and then drops in again should not expect to find his slippers laid out too conveniently near nor a match ready lighted for his cigar. There must be explanation, explanation and possibly exorcism. A little purgatory, and then, maybe, if he were properly humble, he might be trusted with a harp and crown. And so she made no sign that she knew or suspected.

And my friend the reporter could see nothing funny in this. Sent out on an assignment to write up a roaring, hilarious, brilliant joabing story of— But I will not knock a brother.

One evening Ramonti stopped in Helen's half-office-reception room and told his love with the tenderness and ardor of the enraptured artist. His words were a bright flame of the divine fire that glows in the heart of a man who is a dreamer and a doer combined.

But before you give me an answer, he went on before she could accuse him of suddenness. "I must tell you that Ramonti is the only name I have to offer you. My manager gave me that. I do not know who I am, or where I came from. My first recollection is of opening my eyes in a hospital. I was a young man, and I had been there for weeks. My life before that is a blank to me. They told me that I was found lying in the street with a wound on my head and was brought there in an ambulance. They thought I must have fallen and struck my head upon the steps. There was nothing to show who I was. I have never been able to remember. After I was discharged from the hospital I took up the violin. I have had success. Mrs. Barry—I do not know your name except that I love you. The first time I saw you I realized that you were the one woman in the world for me—and—oh, a lot of stuff like that.

Helen felt young again. First a wave of pride and a sweet little thrill of vanity went all over her, and then she looked Ramonti in the eyes, and a tremendous throb went through her heart. She hadn't expected that throb. It took her by surprise. The musician had become a big factor in her life, and she hadn't been aware of it.

"Mr. Ramonti," she said sorrowfully (this was not on the stage, remember; it was in the old home near Abingdon square), "I'm awfully sorry, but I'm a married woman."

And then she told him the sad story of her life, as a heroine must do sooner or later, either to a theatrical manager or to a reporter.

Ramonti took her hand, bowed low and kissed it and went up to his room.

Helen sat down and looked mournfully at her hand. Well she might. Three suitors had kissed it, mounted their red roan steeds and ridden away.

In an hour entered the mysterious stranger with the haunting eyes. Helen was in the willow rocker, knitting a useless thing in cotton wool. He ricocheted from the stairs and stopped for a chat. Sitting across the table from her, he also poured out his narrative of love. And then he said: "Helen, do you not remember me? I think I have seen it in your eyes. Can you forgive the past and remember the love that has lasted for twenty years? I wronged you deeply. I was afraid to come back to you, but my love overpowered my reason. Can you, will you, forgive me?"

"THEY TOLD ME I WAS FOUND IN THE STREET."

Helen stood up. The mysterious stranger held one of her hands in a strong and trembling clasp.

There she stood, and I pity the stage that it has not acquired a scene like that and her emotions to portray.

For she stood with a divided heart. The fresh, unforgettable, virginal love for her bridegroom was hers; the treasured, sacred, honored memory of her first choice filled half her soul. She leaned to that pure feeling. Honor and faith and sweet abiding romance bound her to it. But the other half of her heart and soul was filled with something else—a later, fuller, nearer influence. And so the old fought against the new.

And while she hesitated from the room above came the soft, racking, peccatory music of a violin. The hag Music bewitches some of the nobles. The daws may peck upon one's sleeve without injury, but whoever wears his heart upon his tympanum gets it not far from the neck.

This music and the musician called her, and at her side honor and the old love held her back.

"Forgive me," he pleaded.

"Twenty years is a long time to remain away from the one you say you love," she declared, with a purgatorial touch.

"How could I tell?" he begged. "I will conceal nothing from you. That night when he left I followed him. I was mad with jealousy. On a dark street I struck him down. He did not rise. I examined him. His head had struck a stone. I did not intend to kill him. I was mad with love and jealousy. I hid near by and saw an ambulance take him away. Although you married him, Helen."

"Who are you?" cried the woman, with wide open eyes, snatching her hand away.

"Don't you remember me, Helen—the one who has always loved you the best? I am John Delaney. If you can forgive—"

But she was gone, leaping, stumbling, hurrying, flying up the stairs toward the music and him who had forgotten, but who had known her for his in each of his two existences, and as she climbed up she sobbed, cried and sang, "Frank, Frank, Frank!"

Three mortals thus juggling with years as though they were billiard balls, and my friend the reporter couldn't see anything funny in it!

A TELEGRAM from Christopher, thrusting her head within the open library door and reading from the yellow slip in her hand.

"Snowbound. Will arrive late this evening. Don't sit up."

"Thoughtful Christopher," murmured Dick Mason from the depths of his easy chair.

"Poor old Chris—what luck!" cried Amy, while Alice murmured to her lover, "I am so anxious that you should meet Christopher, Dick."

"Pray, who is Christopher?" Tell me, that I, too, may be distraught at his nonarrival," drawled Penfield, surveying the love-stricken Dick and his betrothed with some disgust and turning to Amy, who was viewing him with unmistakable relish.

"Christopher Browning is our cousin," she replied, with a wicked look at her sister. "The dearest fellow! Writes you know."

"I didn't know," murmured Penfield apologetically.

"Well, Chris does write for the papers, magazines or anything that will take the stuff."

"H-m-m."

Amy looked at him from mirth-brimmed eyes. She was dressing a doll for the cook's little niece, and she tied a pink bow on the flaxen curls and then admired the effect with audible satisfaction.

"Isn't she too sweet? Now I'm going down to the village to leave this at Mrs. Lee's, and you may come, too, Mr. Penfield, for the way is long and the night is stormy."

Penfield arose with alacrity. Anything was better than sitting before the cheery fire and staring at the photograph of the girl he loved unwisely and trying to summon courage to ask carelessly whom the picture represented. Didn't he know?

When they reached the front door Amy ran back to the library, and he heard the rise and fall of her shrill girlish voice as she expostulated with her sister. It was evident that she gained her point, for when she returned she was smiling and her eyes were as bright as the snow crystals sparkling under the radiance from the wide open door.

They plunged into the softly falling whiteness, and Penfield bared his head to the cold fresh air and endeavored to thrust aside the burden that lay heavily upon his heart.

"Such an ideal Christmas eve!" said Amy. "When I was a little girl—"

"Oh, WHEN?" interrupted Jack mockingly.

"WHEN I was a little girl," insisted Amy serenely. "I used to believe that something wonderful must happen on Christmas eve. I would watch at the window and look for a messenger to arrive with marvelous news or expect that a long lost uncle would appear and shower gifts upon us. But it never happened. Nothing wonderful ever does happen to me," she added, with a sigh that was muffled in a mist of flying flakes.

"Time enough for things to happen when you are grown up, child," Jack said gravely, and then, arousing himself from the unpleasant thoughts that, vampire-like, seemed to cling to him, he added: "Come! A race to the corner!" They reached it laughing and breathless.

Later, when they had returned and were sitting before the fire, each waiting for the other to make a bedtime story, Jack remarked lazily: "When do you expect Mr. Browning to arrive?"

Amy giggled. Dick looked amused, and Alice and her mother exchanged glances of distress.

"Oh, any time before midnight, I suppose," replied Alice, with evident constraint. "We will not sit up—the arrival of the train is too uncertain. One of us will hear the bell and come down."

"I was about to volunteer to sit up and wait for him," said Jack. "I am in a wakeful mood tonight."

"Really, Mr. Penfield," began Mrs. Latimer anxiously, when Amy interrupted her eagerly.

"Oh, mother, let him sit up, if he wishes to. We can get up and greet Chris afterward, but there is no use in all of us sitting here like owls until that train comes in. It may not arrive for hours yet, and Peters will be waiting at the station with the sleigh, so Chris will be all right."

"Very well, dear. It doesn't seem quite fair to Chris," remarked Mrs. Latimer gravely, "but you may settle that between yourselves."

"Perhaps I'd better go with Peters," said Dick. "I am ashamed that I did not think of doing so before."

"Oh, Peters has gone," said Mrs. Latimer. "I thought it best for him to be there in case the train should arrive earlier than expected."

"I'm not a paragon," said Mrs. Latimer, said Penfield, looking

JACK PENFIELD'S CHRISTMAS EVE.

BY Clarissa Mackie

"Miss Amy and I got along famously. The snow is very light and soft, and it is not particularly cold. Of course down in the valley at Sanderson, where the train is stalled, it has drifted, and that has caused the blockade. Mr. Browning will not mind the adventure unless he is an invalid," he added doubtfully.

"Oh, Chris is quite robust," replied Alice sweetly. "Now that it is settled Mr. Penfield is to remain up to greet our cousin suppose we hang the stockings and go to bed. We must deposit our gifts on the table here, and mother will fill the stockings at some we must, as usual. When Chris arrives mother and I will come down and give the child something to eat. You must keep up a rousing fire, Mr. Penfield."

"Depend on me for that," returned Jack.

There was much running to and fro and a great deal of merriment as the stockings were hung in the wide old chimneypiece. Then each one brought gifts carefully wrapped and labeled, and with many attempts at secrecy they were heaped upon the library table. Finally, with warm exchanges of Christmas wishes, Mrs. Latimer and her daughters withdrew, leaving the two men alone before the fire.

When Dick Mason had finished his cigar he, too, sought his room, and then Penfield kept his lonely vigil. It was 11 o'clock, and the storm was abating. The soft mist of snow against the window panes had ceased, and west God was everywhere. That was his fancy.

He had come east because a girl had implanted the germ of restlessness within him—a restlessness that forbade him peace of mind until he could persuade her to reconsider her decision. The picture before him was an enlargement of one he had taken himself with a pocket camera. Its duplicate in miniature was folded in his letter case next his heart. In the spring Kitty Brown had come to the west to visit his neighbors, the Clarks. She was a writer, one who was tired and whose body and soul needed relaxation. She found it under the free blue sky as she skimmed over the ranges side by side with Jack Penfield, their feet horses ever in harmony with the spirits of the young riders, and it is true she found something besides relaxation in the eyes of Jack Penfield when the day came for her to return to her enstaring pen.

"You do not understand," she had told him. "I could not give up my work, and I do not love you as much as I love that. You can see," she had added with that frank stifle of hers, "that my love is a divided one, and you cannot accept that."

"No," he had replied gravely. "I can not accept a divided love. And so they had turned their horses' heads homeward, and their parting had been a warm hand clasp and—that was all. That was all Jack Penfield had to think and dream about. The great

Jack told his story while the girl dismounted the parcels she had brought among the limp stockings. There was even a gift for the capacious sock that represented Dick Mason's Christmas.

"I have nothing for yours, Mr. Penfield," she said, regretfully surveying the remaining empty sock.

"A little note saying that you had changed your mind," he began.

"But I haven't changed my mind," she murmured faintly.

"Are you sure?" he insisted. "Your eyes, Kitty, betrayed you when you came into this room. You WERE glad to see me. Say that you will go back to the Bar T with me in the spring."

She hesitated. "Oh, there is some thing in the sock," she said evasively, and she stepped forward and thrusting a hand into the toe, brought forth a small card, which she extended toward Penfield.

He took it and glanced at the opposite side. He uttered an exclamation of surprise. Then he held it out to her.

She took it reluctantly. As she looked, a warm flush spread over her face, and she cried impulsively, "Why, that's mine!"

It was a snapshot of the master of the Bar T ranch standing in the corral, surrounded by hundreds of horned cattle.

"Did you take that picture, Kitty?" asked Jack eagerly.

She nodded shamefacedly.

"How did it get to there?" he asked, with a puzzled look.

A merry voice called from the doorway: "I found it on the floor of your room, Christopher Kit, carefully wrapped in tissue paper, after you went home at Thanksgiving. Of course I recognized Mr. Penfield when he arrived yesterday, and—and I wanted something wonderful to happen on Christmas eve, and for the first time in my life it has happened. And that's all, except merry Christmas both!"

"Bless the child!" murmured Jack happily, gathering the abashed Christopher into his arms.

"That's what I say, too," she whispered softly.

Not the Christmas Spirit.

"It isn't the presents—it's the spirit," said January Jones, the millionaire miner of Goldfield, apropos of Christmas.

"I was in a jewelry shop last January, and something that took place there showed me that with too many of us the Christmas spirit is not the proper one. I was talking to the proprietor. One of the clerks stepped up, excitedly, his eyes beaming with the hope of a big sale.

"Say, boss, he whispered, 'give me the key to the safe. There's a lady wants a solitaire just like the one she has on. She thinks it will be fun to have two rings alike.'

The proprietor did not bring forth the key. He only shook his head and said sadly:

"Don't waste any time on her. The ring she has on is a Christmas present, and she only wants to find out what it then paused abruptly as Penfield advanced.

"Mr. Browning"—Jack stopped short and stared with unbellying eyes.

The girl laughed softly, and there was joy in her eyes as she raised them to his.

"WHERE did you come from?" she asked, dropping her parcels to the table and extending both gloved little hands.

"From the Bar T," he replied facetiously, holding her hands firmly in his great brown palms.

"Explain why you are here of all places. I left you riding the ranges in Montana, and I see you again in the country home of my cousin, and you call me Mr. Browning!" she said, withdrawing her hands and removing the heavy coat that enveloped her.

"I was expecting Christopher Browning. I was sitting up for him. I was surprised when you entered."

"I am Christopher Browning," she said saucily. "Don't dare to tell me that you did not know THAT!"

"I didn't know it," he admitted humbly. "I knew you as Kitty Brown."

"Oh, the Clarks always abbreviated it. And so you did not know you were waiting for me?" she said musically, drawing nearer the fire and holding her hands to the comforting warmth.

"I've been waiting for you ever since you left the ranges, Kitty," he said gravely.

She turned away suddenly, and her voice shook slightly as she replied, "I told you that you must not."

"I cannot help it, Kitty. You must know," he began, drawing nearer to her.

"You may help me distribute my gifts," she said quickly, recovering her composure, "and while we are filling the stockings you must tell me how you came to make the mistake in my name and why you, instead of my affectionate cousins, are waiting for me now."

Jack told his story while the girl dismounted the parcels she had brought among the limp stockings. There was even a gift for the capacious sock that represented Dick Mason's Christmas.

Husbands, Sweethearts and Friends, is there any Christmas gift you can give your wife, your Best Girl or to any lady friend that will be more appreciated, practical and useful than an "up-to-date" Vacuum cleaner?

They are now so low in price, they come within reach of almost any purse, and are so perfect and effective in working they have become indispensable in every home. Housekeepers now realize that dust, dirt and disease germs are in our carpets, rugs and all through our homes 365 days in the year. And that a spasm of "House-cleaning" in spring and fall does not eliminate or destroy them. A perfect, easy working Vacuum cleaner chases them out of the house every day, or at least once a week, and your home becomes a "spotless one."

Read The Following Testimonial

Syracuse, N. Y., November 14, 1910

Mr. S. L. Harrell, Mgr., Syracuse Vacuum Cleaner Co.

Dear Sir:—

We purchased the Regina—Peerless Vacuum Cleaner of you some time ago and find it to be all you recommended it to be, and even more, as it keeps our home "spotlessly clean," the rugs look bright, as when they came from the store, and there is absolutely no dust on the furniture, or stirring through the house.

We have never owned any article we prized so highly, because of its labor saving qualities, and my wife finds she can work it very effectively alone.

Signed, E. J. Wetherby

Advertising Department, Syracuse Journal.

We have The Regina and The Peerless at $18.00 each—also The Queen at $15.00 each. These are hand worked, and work so easily that a young girl or an elderly woman may operate them effectively alone. We have The Regina at $10.00 each, The Nuway, $85.00 each, The Peerless, $65.00 each, electric worked. Either or all of the above we will confidently assert are the best Vacuum cleaners ever produced, and we have never before sold so many of them as during the past few weeks.

If we have no agency in your neighborhood please write, phone or call at our rooms and let us demonstrate the truth of these assertions.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS IMPROVED

Dun's Review of December 3, contains the following general synopsis of business conditions throughout the United States:

Business, while not so large as was anticipated a year ago, is, nevertheless, of fair proportions and rests upon a basis of economic conditions which in the main are satisfactory. The encouraging features are the unabated agricultural productivity of the country, the absence of demoralizing speculation, the lowness of mercantile stocks which contributes so largely to the soundness of the situation, the conservatism of the banks as the guardians of the country's credits, and the signs of increasing relaxation in the money market. A noteworthy development of the week was the decision of the steel manufacturers to maintain prices, and although new business is much below productive capacity yet there is an encouraging outlook for improvement, and the Pennsylvania Railroad's large order for rails is a hopeful sign. Large shipments of dry goods for spring distribution is another encouraging sign and the outlook in the shoe trade is described as brighter. Reports from most of the large cities, while not disguising the fact that the volume of transactions is below normal, indicate improvement and a generally hopeful feeling.

MAY PURCHASE BUSH STORE

It is reported in business circles that Sheriff C. W. Taft is negotiating with George W. Bush, for the purchase of his drug business. Sheriff Taft stated this afternoon that he had had talks with Mr. Bush regarding the matter but as yet there was nothing definite.

Sheriff Taft at one time conducted a drug store at Williamstown. If the deal passes through it is said possession will be taken next fall. —Oswego Times.

SUDDENLY SUMMONED

Williamstown, Dec. 5. —Thomas Hayes, of Redfield, fell dead at Frost's gristmill Saturday while paying his bill. He was a well known farmer.

MARY BAKER G. EDDY DEAD

The death of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy occurred on Saturday night at her home near Boston, Mass., at the age of 90 years. As the leader in the Christian Science church died without medical attendance, the cause for her death will probably never be positively known. Her followers do not admit that she has died, speaking of her passing away as "an incident."

The venerable leader of her cult died worth in the neighborhood of $2,000,000, all of which will go to the advancement of her work, a settlement having been made upon her relatives last year, so that it is not probable that her son or her adopted son will care to contest the will.

Her funeral, which will be private, will be held from the late home on Thursday afternoon and the place of interment has not been revealed. Her demise is mourned by more than a million followers in the United States.

HANNIBAL CASE IN COURT

In Surrogate's Court Monday morning, Attorneys E. J. Milzen and Ezra A. Barnes, acting for several legatees of the late Isaac Haws of Hannibal, argued for the removal of Clinton Haws also of Hannibal, as executor of the Isaac Haws estate on the ground of misconduct. It is claimed that Clinton Haws has brought an action against the estate of which he is executor. Attorney C. S. Kanitz of Syracuse appeared for Mr. Haws. The case was adjourned for one week.

CITIZENS CLUB TO ENTERTAIN

This Wednesday evening the Citizens' Club will be at home to their friends and invited guests in the club rooms, at which time a superb program will be presented. The Evelyn Bargelt Concert Company will appear, composed of Madame de-Lewandowska, violinist; Evelyn Bargelt, reader and cartoonist; Francois Jores, pianist; Leon Batckelder, flute and piccolo.

These are all high class artists and will render a program of unusual merit. Each performer is a star and the entertainment committee of the club is to be congratulated upon securing such a quartette with which to entertain their friends.

This is the first lady's night of the season and the opening of the club's social season. The next entertainment will be a dancing reception to be given on December 28.

"DID YOU TAKE THAT PICTURE, KITTY?"

there was an occasional flickle of sleigh bells from the highway which proclaimed that belated Christmas shoppers were venturing out.

Penfield stared moodily at the picture of the girl he loved. It stood on the mantelpiece, framed in silver. It portrayed a girl in riding dress with one arm thrown over the neck of a horse, whose nose muzzled her other hand. She was a wide eyed, soft featured girl, with dark hair parted in the middle and topped by a broad felt hat. Her round chin was lifted above the low collar of her white blouse, and from the crown of her hat to the tips of her riding boots she appeared the embodiment of life, health and love. Yet love she had withheld from Jack Penfield. He was thinking of that now as he sat there—thinking how strange it was that he should have found her picture in the home of his cousin's fiancée, among people whom he had never before met, but who had greeted him warmly as Dick Mason's cousin and had taken him into their midst as one of themselves. He had come out of the west a fortnight before—out of the west where he had made his home for years; away from the open life of the plains, the free air of Montana, where he was king on his own ranch, to the overcrowded east, where so simple-hearted Jack Penfield had sought and found a partner for his lonely life.

"Very well, dear. It doesn't seem quite fair to Chris," remarked Mrs. Latimer gravely, "but you may settle that between yourselves."

"Perhaps I'd better go with Peters," said Dick. "I am ashamed that I did not think of doing so before."

"Oh, Peters has gone," said Mrs. Latimer. "I thought it best for him to be there in case the train should arrive earlier than expected."

"I'm not a paragon," said Mrs. Latimer, said Penfield, looking eastern city swallowed her up. He had not asked for her address, but as the months went by and brilliant autumn claimed the land, and the broad plain and distant ranges changed color under her hard, cold touch, he grew restless, and finally in December he arranged his affairs, and leaving his foreman in charge of the Bar T outfit, he had come to New York to find Kitty Brown. He had been too proud and reserved to ask for information from her friends, the Clarks, and his quest for the girl he loved had been quite hopeless. Then he had dropped in upon his cousin Dick Mason, who had picked him up and carried him off for the holidays to the country home of the Latimers, and here he was, with the first clew to Kitty Brown staring him in the face. He felt no elation now, for with the nearness of her discovery came the thought that she would send him away again. Nevertheless he determined that he would unburden himself to sweet, motherly Mrs. Latimer in the morning.

There was a tinkle of sleighbells drawing nearer, the faint sound of an arrival at the door, and he hastened to his feet to greet the coming stranger, whom he had almost forgotten. The hall door closed softly, and then the door of the library was pushed open and a slim, dark clad figure, with arms helmeting over with packages, slipped into the room and then paused abruptly as Penfield advanced.

"Mr. Browning"—Jack stopped short and stared with unbellying eyes.

The girl laughed softly, and there was joy in her eyes as she raised them to his.

"WHERE did you come from?" she asked, dropping her parcels to the table and extending both gloved little hands.

"From the Bar T," he replied facetiously, holding her hands firmly in his great brown palms.

"Explain why you are here of all places. I left you riding the ranges in Montana, and I see you again in the country home of my cousin, and you call me Mr. Browning!" she said, withdrawing her hands and removing the heavy coat that enveloped her.

"I was expecting Christopher Browning. I was sitting up for him. I was surprised when you entered."

"I am Christopher Browning," she said saucily. "Don't dare to tell me that you did not know THAT!"

"I didn't know it," he admitted humbly. "I knew you as Kitty Brown."

"Oh, the Clarks always abbreviated it. And so you did not know you were waiting for me?" she said musically, drawing nearer the fire and holding her hands to the comforting warmth.

"I've been waiting for you ever since you left the ranges, Kitty," he said gravely.

She turned away suddenly, and her voice shook slightly as she replied, "I told you that you must not."

"I cannot help it, Kitty. You must know," he began, drawing nearer to her.

"You may help me distribute my gifts," she said quickly, recovering her composure, "and while we are filling the stockings you must tell me how you came to make the mistake in my name and why you, instead of my affectionate cousins, are waiting for me now."

Jack told his story while the girl dismounted the parcels she had brought among the limp stockings. There was even a gift for the capacious sock that represented Dick Mason's Christmas.

"I have nothing for yours, Mr. Penfield," she said, regretfully surveying the remaining empty sock.

"A little note saying that you had changed your mind," he began.

"But I haven't changed my mind," she murmured faintly.

"Are you sure?" he insisted. "Your eyes, Kitty, betrayed you when you came into this room. You WERE glad to see me. Say that you will go back to the Bar T with me in the spring."

She hesitated. "Oh, there is some thing in the sock," she said evasively, and she stepped forward and thrusting a hand into the toe, brought forth a small card, which she extended toward Penfield.

He took it and glanced at the opposite side. He uttered an exclamation of surprise. Then he held it out to her.

She took it reluctantly. As she looked, a warm flush spread over her face, and she cried impulsively, "Why, that's mine!"

It was a snapshot of the master of the Bar T ranch standing in the corral, surrounded by hundreds of horned cattle.

"Did you take that picture, Kitty?" asked Jack eagerly.

She nodded shamefacedly.

"How did it get to there?" he asked, with a puzzled look.

Total of $623 Deposited in Youngsters' Bank During the Year
Canton, Dec. 8.—The school children of Canton are embryo capitalists. A recent report of the auditor of the school savings bank, established by some women here a little over a year ago, shows that the children have on deposit the sum of $459.44 and there has been deposited during the year $623 and $3 has been paid out in interest.

The women are much encouraged in their efforts to teach the children to become saving. The children are permitted to deposit on one day in the week any sum they see fit and the idea has proved a popular one. The women behind the movement are actuated by philanthropic motives only a local bank acts as custodian of the fund and pays a small rate of interest which is allowed to the depositor where his deposit remains untouched a sufficient length of time.

How New York Papers View President's Message

World—It is a stand-pat message, conciliatory in language but strangely unresponsive to popular needs and aspirations.

Sun—Look before you legislate says President Taft. How different was the procedure consistently practiced during the previous administration.

Herald—It is a message of rest and peace.

Press—His carefulness in dealing with situations which are difficult of management does not mean that at the right moment he would not act positively and with force.

American—The tone of the President's message is admirable. It is as straight forward as the character of the man who wrote it.

Tribune—It is a persuasive and utterly honest document marked throughout by a patriotic intent to serve the nation's interests.

Times—Of actual recommendations for new laws there are not a few in the message, but none of them is of a disturbing nature.

Evening Post—It is not inspiring; it gives no positive lead. Instead of issuing a call to action, Mr. Taft has written a tedious judicial review.

GOING TO FULTON

Gouverneur, Dec. 10.—D. Bennett, the local representative of the Syracuse Post-Standard has been promoted by his paper to the position of manager and correspondent at Fulton. Mr. Bennett is a capable and energetic newspaper man, and has the proverbial "nose for news." That he will make good is a certainty. He has represented that paper in town for the past four years and he has been a fearless and unimpaired writer.

CITIZEN'S BAND DANCE

The following program will be rendered by the Citizen's Band at Church's Hall, Friday evening, at their regular semi-monthly concert and promenade.

There will be a slight deviation however, from the organizations as far as planned, in that this promenade will be in the nature of a masquerade, which has been granted by the band after frequent requests by a large number who have thus far participated in their parties this season.

There will be no change in the price of admission, but it is probable that a prize will be given to the best masked lady and gentleman. The participants will unmask at a signal to be given during the playing of the Grand March.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB

No Abatement of Interest in the Instructive Program Presented
The Current Events Club assembled on Monday evening, December 5, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Witale, the members showing no abatement of interest in the program presented.

As a prelude, a generous invitation was extended to the members to attend an entertainment at the Citizens Club on the following Wednesday evening.

A motion prevailed that the Hon. N. N. Stranahan be requested to deliver a lecture for the benefit of the Public Library. The arrangement was left with the Executive of the club and it was hoped that the date would not be long deferred.

The literary program for the evening was presented by Messrs. L. W. Emerick, A. T. Jennings and Lewis Rice. Mr. Emerick gave an instructive resume of the employers' liability and labor compensation laws. The speaker dwelt particularly upon the indefinite and analogous character of the law.

Attorney Jennings spoke of "Pre-historic Man," describing in an interesting manner the science of antiquities.

Attorney Lewis Rice gave a unique summary of slang as it has been ingrained into modern English language by the newspapers and adopted in ordinary conversation, venturing the opinion that a game of baseball would be unintelligible to a present day "fan" if described in terse English.

The next meeting of the club will be held on Monday evening, December 19, at the home of Mrs. Mary Emerick, when debate on some current event will be presented by the Rev. F. A. Miller and Prof. George B. Douel.

BEEF AND PORK DEARER

Packers Raise Price One and Two Cents a Pound, Respectively

Omaha, Neb., Dec. 8.—The prices of fresh beef and pork in all parts of the country are to be advanced immediately. The big packers today raised the prices of both 1 cent a pound, and retailers will make a corresponding increase. Yesterday 1 cent was added to the price of pork, so that prices on this commodity have increased 2 cents in as many days. Packers say the prices on all fresh meats will continue to advance for the present.

At the South Omaha live stock market hogs today jumped from 15 to 30 cents per hundred pounds and cattle have been advancing steadily for a week.

A sprained ankle will usually disable the injured person for three or four weeks. This is due to lack of proper treatment. When Chamberlain's Liniment is applied a cure may be effected in three or four days. This liniment is one of the best and most remarkable preparations in use. Sold by all dealers.

THE CHRISTMAS BURGLAR MAN

"Is your father at home, kid?"

He was not altogether an unpleasant looking man who addressed the question to a fair haired child alone on the veranda of a suburban villa late in the afternoon of the day before Christmas.

The little girl stopped playing, frowned prettily and answered:

"My name's Muriel, not kid, and my papa never gets home till long after I've gone to bed. What's your name?"

The hulking fellow averted his eyes and answered her question by asking another:

"Who else lives with you?"

"Oh, my little brother—you haven't seen him, have you?—my mamma and Mary. Mary's the servant, you know."

"Good day, young'un," said the tramp as he ambled away.

"Muriel I'm called," she shouted after him. "Will you come again?"

"Thank'ee; I reckon I will," he answered.

"Oh, wait a minute, papa; I'm so sleepy!"

Muriel knelt no in her little bed, and bed her eyes and about her golden curls out. It was midnight. Having completely recovered from dreamland, she looked at the tall figure beside her bed and gasped with delight when she realized that her long cherished desire was going to be carried out. Papa had often promised to play at burglars with her, and there he was, quite ready, with the black mask covering his eyes and a little lantern that gave only a wee light.

"WHERE ARE YOU GOING NOW?" SHE ASKED.

"Oh, papa," she cried, "you do look a funny burglar! We'll take his jewelry first. Won't she be surprised?"

The midnight intruder nodded.

"Where does ma keep it, Muriel?" he asked. "Burglars don't know where things are, you know. That's half the fun of it, eh?"

"Oh, you are funny, papa! Let's whisper softer. It's on the dressing table in one of the little drawers. See?"

Muriel felt herself lifted shoulder high.

"Now, then, ki—Muriel," he whispered, "when we pass your mamma's room, ki—Muriel, you just point to it and keep as quiet as a mouse. That's the proper way, isn't it?"

She nodded delightedly and did as he wished.

"Where are you going now?" she asked almost inaudibly as she was being carried downstairs.

"Why, somebody must keep watch. Don't you know that one burglar takes the things while another keeps watch?"

He carried her down into the cellar. It was very dark and cold, but Muriel said she wasn't afraid because they were only playing burglars.

"Now, then, ki—Muriel," he whispered, "you keep watch and don't make a noise." He slipped into her tiny hand one small bar of chocolate.

"That's your share of the swag," he said and disappeared.

Muriel giggled when she thought of mamma's surprise. She listened a long time for return footsteps and wondered, after all, if papa had been caught. She was not at all comfortable, nor was she warm, and a few minutes later her pretty eyes closed, her head dropped, and she drifted into dreamland. Then she was awakened by her father. The mask was gone from the face, and he looked pale and troubled.

"Oh, you've come back!" she whispered, remembering the last caution she had received.

"Why are you here, dearie?" asked her father.

"You brought me, papa. Don't you remember—when we were playing burglars?"

Muriel's father telephoned to the police and reported the strange burglary. In the morning he spent an hour in convincing his little girl that he was not the man who wore the mask.

"Well, papa," she said in the end, "he was a very good Christmas burglar, wasn't he?"

Woes of the Collector.

"Did you get anything out of her?" asked the business manager of the collector.

"Yes; she paid me a compliment. Said she wouldn't be afraid to trust me with the money if she had it."—New York Times.

REPORT OF POST MASTER
GENERAL HITCHCOCKPostal Service Extended—Deficit
Vanishing—Tells of Progress Made in Year

Washington, D. C.—In the space of twelve months a reduction has been made in the deficit of the Postoffice Department of $11,500,000, according to the annual report of Postmaster General Frank H. Hitchcock.

While a year ago the fiscal records of the postal service disclosed a deficit of $17,500,000, the largest in the history of the country, the excess of expenditures over receipts for the year ended June 30 last amounted to only $5,848,586.54 in commenting upon this reduction, Postmaster General Hitchcock says in his report:

It is most gratifying to report that this unprecedented reduction has been made without any curtailment of postal facilities. On the contrary, the service has been largely extended.

The policy of the present administration has been to wipe out losses by increasing the postal business as long profitable lines, and while thus enlarging the department's income to reduce as far as possible the rate of expenditure by cutting out wasteful processes, by simplifying and rendering more effective the methods of handling postal business and by raising to the highest possible standard the efficiency of officers and employees.

The more quickly mail matter can be handled the less expensive is the process. The department, accordingly, has devoted itself with great earnestness to the work of increasing the efficiency of the mail service, considering this the surest method of making the postal establishment self-supporting.

The department's policy is to extend the service as rapidly as is warranted by increasing population. In furtherance of this policy 1,500 new postoffices were established during the last year and 515 new rural delivery routes, traversing altogether 1,235 miles, were instituted. Nearly 3,600 new employees of various classes were placed upon the rolls of the department, whose aggregate salaries were more than $2,000,000 annually.

In addition to this sum, $1,750,000 was added to the salaries of postoffice clerks, $1,226,000 to the salaries of letter carriers and $250,000 to the salaries of railway mail clerks. All increases in salary were based upon efficiency ratings.

In the discussion of second-class mail, Postmaster General Hitchcock points out the constant growth of this class of matter. It is carried at a loss and he urges that a remedy should be promptly applied by charging more postage.

"In levying the higher rate," the report suggests, "it is believed that a distinction should be made between advertising matter and what is termed legitimate reading matter."

"Under present conditions an increase in the postage on reading matter is not recommended. Such an increase would place a special burden on a large number of second-class publications, including educational and religious periodicals, that derive little or no profit from advertising.

"It is the circulation of this type of publications which aid so effectively in the educational and moral advancement of the people that the government can best afford to encourage. For these publications, and also for any other legitimate reading matter in periodical form, the department favors a continuation of the present low postage rate of 1 cent a pound, and recommends that the proposed increase in rate be applied only to magazine advertising matter."

"In view of the vanishing postal deficit it is believed that if the magazines could be required to pay what it costs the government to carry their advertising pages the department's revenues would soon grow large enough to warrant 1-cent postage on first-class mail."

"Newspapers are not included in the plan for a higher rate on advertising matter because, being chiefly of local distribution, they do not employ the mails to any such extent as the widely circulating magazines."

While the loss resulting from the low postage rate on second-class mail is the greatest in the postal service, the loss on rural delivery service is very considerable. The appropriations annually granted to maintain the rural delivery system, however, as pointed out in the report, are expended in the interests of a vast population. Mr. Hitchcock urges the wisdom of further extension of this system even at a considerable loss to the government. He points out, also, the business wisdom of the consolidation during the last year of the star route and rural delivery system, the consolidation having been the means of effecting a large saving and of increasing the efficiency of the service.

Mr. Hitchcock reviews the work already accomplished looking to the establishment of postal savings banks. A trial of the new system will be made, beginning January 1, 1911, at one postoffice in each state and territory of the Union. The amount appropriated by Congress for this trial was $100,000. All of the offices selected for the trial are of the second class, wage earners being particularly benefited. It is expected that the new postal savings system will be extended to many other offices before the end of the current fiscal year.

A renewal of the previous recommendation for a limited parcel post service on rural routes is made. Mr. Hitchcock expresses the hope that

WITHERILL'S

SALINA and FAYETTE STS., SYRACUSE

In the pre-Christmas sermon to young people at the First Methodist church next Sunday evening Rev. C. L. Peck will tell the remarkable story of Chaplain McCabe's Dream of Ingersollville. The theme of the sermon will be "Hitch your wagon to a Star." All are welcome.

Columbia Circle, Ladies of the G. A. R., elected the following officers at their last meeting: President, Mrs. Mary J. Harper; senior vice president, Mrs. Naomi Tallman; junior vice president, Mrs. Ida Osborn; treasurer, Mrs. Maude Ouderjick; chaplain, Mrs. Maria Slauson; conductor, Mrs. Marie Summerville; guard, Miss Eva Palmer; delegates to convention, Mrs. Ida B. Parker, Mrs. Helen Rice, Mrs. Cora H. H. Mrs. Mary Hare, Mrs. Maria Slauson.

THE WEEK

The year now drawing to a close will be notable for its harvest, the money value of its farm products being computed at close to $9,000,000,000—a record figure. This fact forms the best possible basis for industrial advance next year. While for several months the volume of production and distribution has been below the normal, there can be no widespread stagnation while the farms of the country continue to yield so bountifully as they have during the past eleven months. Moreover, the government report issued this week shows that the winter wheat area sown this fall is the largest on record, and that weather conditions have improved since the report was gathered. There is, however, little change in financial and business sentiment, which remains conservative and cautious. The holiday trade is, nevertheless, opening up well, and in certain important centers the jobbing trade in staple merchandise is reported as improving. The colder weather has been beneficial to most merchants and the heavy fall of snow is most seasonable. The cotton spinning shows a larger output than had been expected, and the year's crop will be considerably larger than last year's. Money conditions are more satisfactory, and the Bank of England, following its reduced discount rate last week, reports this week one of the largest percentages of reserve for this time in years. Railroad earnings during the month of November increased 2.6 per cent. over last year. Bank clearings, while continuing to show, as for some time past, decreases in New York as compared with 1909 and 1910, are elsewhere 4.4 per cent. better than in 1909 and 13.0 per cent. better than in 1908. Exports from New York in the latest week aggregated $15,954,435, which is $1,530,064 better than last year, but $1,530,064 under the imports, the volume of which was about equal to last year. —Dun's Review, for December 10.

REPORT OF POSTMASTER GENERAL HITCHCOCK

Congress will authorize the delivery on rural routes of parcels weighing as high as eleven pounds. This scheme can be put into operation with little if any expense to the government.

A recommendation is made that Congressional authority be given the Department for the issuance of postal notes in amounts not exceeding ten dollars, at a lower fee than is charged for money orders.

Mr. Hitchcock believes that many abuses of the franking system could be prevented, with marked economy, by supplying special official envelopes and stamps for the free mail of the government. In the present circumstances it is impossible to determine the cost to the government of the franking privilege, but if it were hedged about by such a plan as Mr. Hitchcock suggests it would be possible to determine definitely the cost of carrying free mail for all executive departments and for the Congress.

It is indicated in the report that the crusade by the Postoffice Department against the fraudulent use of the mails has been pushed with great vigor. During the last few months the principal officers of thirty-four corporations and firms have been placed under arrest for swindling the public by this method.

"It is estimated," the report says, "that the eighty important cases recently brought to a head represent swindling operations that have siphoned from the American people in less than a decade fully $100,000,000."

Mr. Hitchcock strongly urges that the entire postal service be taken out of politics. He says: "The recent order of the President classifying on the recommendation of the Department, all assistant postmasters was an important step in the right direction. As a still more important reform, presidential postmasters of all grades from the first class to the third, should be placed in the classified service. This action, which is earnestly recommended would unquestionably result in a still better standard of service."

A general extension of the civil service rules to fourth class postmasters is recommended, although some disadvantages have developed in the application of the civil service rules to postmasters of that class.

In conclusion, Postmaster General Hitchcock expresses the hope that Congress will see its way clear to grant an annual leave of absence of thirty days to postoffice clerks, city letter carriers, and to railway postal clerks who are required to work six days or more a week throughout the year.

BURGLAR DEFYING CLOCK

An entirely new type of watchman's clock which will be a terror to burglars and negligent guardians of factories and buildings, has been invented and patented by W. M. Waite of 13 Forest avenue, Syracuse.

The Waite Manufacturing Company is being organized to put the device on the market and the factory will be located in Syracuse.

There are many unique features in Mr. Waite's clock. It is so constructed that an attack upon a watchman by a burglar or other intruder will be practically impossible. If the watchman does not "ring in" at fifteen minute intervals an automatic electric whistle on the outside of the building will be blown thus summoning the police. The watchman must have a schedule for his rounds and ring in at stated intervals from the various stations, or there will be trouble.

Should the watchman detect a burglar trying to gain entrance, all he has to do is to pull a lever and an alarm will be sounded at police headquarters.

If a fire is discovered in the building, the watchman pulls the lever in the opposite direction and an alarm is not only sent in to fire headquarters but the automatic whistle is also blown. This will make possible a prompt effort to check the spread of the flames.

FOR ECZEMA, TETTER AND SALT RHEUM

The intense itching characteristic of these ailments is almost instantly allayed by Chamberlain's Salve. Many severe cases have been cured by it. For sale by all dealers.

CINNAMON TREE BARK.

It Curls Up Into Quills When Dried in the Sun.

The cinnamon tree grows to a height of from twenty to thirty feet and is sometimes eighteen inches in thickness. The leaves are from four to six inches in length, oval shaped and marked with three principal nerves. They taste very much like cloves. Cinnamon flowers are of a beautiful silky gray on the outside and a light yellow on the inside. The fruit is a small acorn shaped drupe, and when ripe it is quite brown.

It is, however, the bark of the cinnamon tree that makes it valuable. The finest comes from the island of Ceylon, where they have two seasons of cinnamon harvest. The first season begins in April and the last in November. The branches of three to five years' growth are cut down, and the epidermis is carefully scraped away. Then the bark is ripped up lengthwise with a knife and gradually loosened until it may be easily removed.

The slices of bark are then placed in the sun to dry, and as they dry they curl up into quills. The next thing is to examine and arrange the cinnamon according to its quality. The persons whose work it is to examine the cinnamon are obliged for this purpose to taste and chew it, although in a short time it produces a very painful effect on their mouths and tongues.

As the cinnamon quills are examined the smaller ones are inserted into the larger, and the whole is then tied up in bundles weighing about eighty-eight pounds each.

In Ceylon the oil of cinnamon is usually prepared by grinding the coarsest pieces of bark, soaking this powder in sea water for two or three days and then distilling. Two oils pass over, one lighter, the other heavier, than water.

A Sign of a Crowd.

A very fat, pudgy, elderly woman stepped up to the box office of the Chestnut Street theater and, placing a coin on the ticket window, said:

"Give me a ticket to the gallery."

"You are at the wrong window, madam," said the ticket seller. "The gallery ticket office is to your left as you go out of the door."

The old woman walked down the steps and, advancing a few feet, glanced around inquiringly and then let her gaze wander to the iron fire escape which was suspended above the sidewalk.

Going back to the main box office, she said:

"Say, me boy, Ol can't get in there; it's crowded."

"Crowded?"

"Sure, it must be," she said. "They have the stage pulled up."—Philadelphia Times.

Books as Christmas Gifts.

It is a great mistake to choose Christmas books entirely by covers and gossamer, and it is well to remember that it is better to postpone a gift for a few days rather than to buy a poor book. If you feel that you must buy books without reading them you can at least select something published by firms of good reputation, knowing that they will be careful what is sent out under their names.

Fulton Dairy Feed

satisfies the requirements of the most expert and exacting critics. Dr. W. H. Jordan, Director of the New York Agricultural Experiment Station, in his recently published book on "Feed and Feeding", says:

"It is simply necessary that the grain ration shall contain protein in sufficient quantity and proportion, and shall be made up of a variety of materials, better not less than three kinds, all of which should be palatable and exert no deleterious influence upon the milk or its products."

FULTON DAIRY FEED

is a mixture of seven of the best protein feeds in the market—including Buck, wheat Middlings which few dealers can supply. Furthermore, it is so carefully and scientifically compounded as to produce a perfect balanced ration.

"Ed snugly in a round bag, the Christmas pudding bubbled merrily in the big pot on the gas range. Young Mrs. Bell tripped lightly to and fro about the tiny kitchen, her heart full of Yuletide cheer and gentle graciousness. It was her first Christmas as a housewife, and the little flat was spick and span with cleanliness.

Laura Bell lifted the pot lid and peered at the fragrant pudding. "My, but that does smell Christmasy!" sighed Laura as she replaced dors tomorrow," said Laura daringly as she cleared away the treat. "What do you suppose they would say?"

"Probably complain to the janitor," grinned Timothy, gathering a pile of dishes and whisking them into the kitchen. "Hurry up, sweetheart. Let the dishes wait till we come home. Get on your things and let's join the crowd. If we can't have a Lakerville Christmas we'll have the New York kind, eh?"

"Of course we will," agreed his wife.

The Bells enjoyed their excursion into the shopping districts. The broad avenues were ablaze with light and color, and the moving multitudes of Christmas purchasers formed constantly changing pictures that delighted the country bred eyes of Timothy and his wife. More than once Timothy's hand went down into his pocket to add a mite to some Salvation Army kettle on a corner or to dispense holiday comfort to some one whose need of food or warmth was apparent to his observing glance. Once he and Laura conveyed a party of four ragged urchins into a little toyshop and made four children radiantly happy with simple gifts.

When they reached home again the clocks were striking 11 and Laura's eyes were sparkling with happiness, while Timothy felt a quiet satisfaction in the pleasure the evening had brought them. As they waited for the elevator a young man and a girl entered the building and stood near them.

Timothy's keen glance noted that the man was well dressed, but rather thin and pale. His face was thin and pale. As if he had recently been ill, while his dark eyes wore a brooding, discouraged expression that was out of keeping with the spirit of the approaching festival. The girl, who wore a wedding ring on one slender angloved hand, watched him with a pretty air of motherly anxiety. She was a brown little thing, with hair and eyes of a warm russet hue and a charming face that attracted Laura Bell's attention.

As they glided up in the elevator Laura found herself watching the girl with interest. There was a sad look when the young man's glance was turned away from her uplifted face, and Laura noted little tense lines about the mobile lips. The elevator stopped at the Bell's floor, and as they left the car Mrs. Bell turned with a sudden impulse and nodded in the friendliest manner at the little brown girl.

"Merry Christmas!" she called.

The door slammed as the car mounted up, but the brown girl leaned forward and called back in a low, sweet voice, "Merry Christmas to you!"

"I did it, Timothy," sang Laura as they entered their own cozy flat. "I knew some of these flat dwellers were human—even if you doubted it."

"Wrong again and glad of it—this time," admitted Timothy as he turned up the gas in the parlor. "Now, Laura, how about those dishes?"

"They must be done tonight," declared Mrs. Bell, tying a large apron about her slender form. "There won't be a thing to do tomorrow except to roast the chicken, heat up the pudding and cook some vegetables."

Laura went to the window that opened on a fire escape and raised it. Then she uttered a faint shriek of dismay and turned to her husband.

"It's gone!" she cried dramatically.

"What—the pudding?" Timothy approached the window and made a careful examination of the impromptu refrigerator. "Nothing here; not a blessed pudding of any kind," he reported. "Sure you didn't bring it inside and forget about it?"

Laura opened the pantry door and revealed its cupboard-like interior. There were the plump chicken and the delicately tinted celery and the crimson cranberry sauce and bowl of fruit, but there was no sign of that snugly bagged plum pudding that was to be the chef d'oeuvre of the Christmas feast.

The hour that followed was an exciting one for the Bells. They searched high and low, in the most impossible places, for the delectable pudding that Laura had made, but in vain. At last Timothy went down to the basement and consulted the genial janitor, who listened with interest to his tale of woe, but offered no solace.

It was after 7 o'clock on Christmas morning when Laura was awakened by a ringing of the hall bell. Throwing on a warm wrapper and thrusting her feet into furry slippers, she hastened into the narrow hall, careful not to disturb her sleeping husband.

Laura opened the door the merest crack and peered inquisitively through. What she saw caused her to throw the door open with cordial hospitality. "Merry Christmas! Come in, dear," she said to the little brown girl who stood there, looking rather pale and frightened.

"For just a moment. There is something I must explain." She slipped inside and sunk into the chair that Laura offered. "I know you will think it strange that I have come, a perfect stranger, but the janitor said you had lost a pudding."

"I have. Did you find it?" cried Laura eagerly. "It's the greatest mystery what has become of it."

The girl smiled sadly, and a flush reddened her cheek for a brief instant and was gone. "I shall have to tell you about ourselves," she said, with dignity, "so that you will understand why we have eaten half of your pudding. We're all alone, both of us, and we've had bad luck ever since we were married. In September Paul was taken down with typhoid fever and lost his position as bookkeeper. He's just able to get around now and look for work, and he hasn't been at all successful. Things have been going from bad to worse, and we're going to move out the first of the year. We've been running low for a long time, and for the last two days we haven't had much to eat, so there—just milk or something like that. To-night before we went out the dumb waiter whistle sounded, and when I opened the slide there was our bottle of milk, with a plum pudding in a bag."

"I thought—honestly I did—that somebody had sent it up to us, though we're not acquainted with a soul here, and so I heated it up, and we ate half of it. It was lovely. A little while ago the janitor came and inquired if we'd seen a plum pudding, so I came right down to tell you, as Paul is asleep. I don't know what to say to you."

"Don't you dare say another word about that pudding," commanded Laura. "If you only knew how lonesome we are today you and your husband would come down and spend the day with us. We were wishing we knew somebody in the house here to ask, I'm so thankful about that pudding. Why, if I hadn't put it in the dumb waiter instead of the fire escape I'm very absentminded when I'm busy; you would never have received it, and we might never have been acquainted. Isn't it a blessed old pudding?"

These two lonely young women hugged each other delightedly, and afterward Laura went to arouse Timothy that he might accompany her to the floor above, where the Robinsons lived, and add his persuasions to bear

"I think that will be easy," promised Mr. Bell.

It was a merry little gathering that did justice to Laura's Christmas dinner. The tragedy that was beneath the eating of half the pudding was quite forgotten in the joy of the present and the hopeful outlook for the future. When the day was over and the Robinsons had returned to their rooms, cheered in mind and purse by Timothy's delicately proffered generosity, Laura slipped her hand in her husband's arm and leaned her head against him, saying:

"It's been different from any Christmas I ever spent. Timothy, and I've been wondering what might have happened to them if that blessed pudding hadn't opened the way."

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

Oswego, December 8.—The principal matter before the Board of Supervisors at the session today was the question of the running of tracks for the Beebe Syndicate suburban trolley road across the lower bridge in Fulton. Opposition to the permit given by the Department of Works of Fulton developed and the matter was referred to County Attorney Coville and County Superintendent Howard. The question was raised by Supervisor Gayer of Fulton who introduced a resolution referring the track question to the County Superintendent of Highways with power to act in behalf of the County.

Supervisor Gayer explained that the county had paid one-third of the cost of the Fulton lower bridge and should have something to say before any tracks were laid. He said, he believed the bridge was built to carry the regular traffic and big suburban cars.

He said the Beebe Syndicate should build a private bridge and he wanted the Supervisors to know that Fulton people were against the lower bridge arrangement. Supervisor Rounds of Oswego Town said he thought the resolution should read that the two county officials report back to the board relative to the County rights, during the session.

Supervisor W. M. Barker spoke against this as he thought it might be necessary to secure an injunction at any time.

Supervisor Rounds said that was the very reason why the County should report to the board before taking any action.

He declared that this section of the county was very much interested in the building of the trolley road and when the matter was more carefully considered there might be opposition among the supervisors to interfering in any way with the laying of the single tracks across the bridge. County Attorney Coville was finally called before the Board and an executive session followed. The discussion resulted in the Gayer resolution referring the question to the County officials standing and also favorable providing for a report back to the Board. Supervisor Fuller of Fulton and other Supervisors discussed the bridge situation.

Supervisor Hydorn presented the report of the special committee to settle monthly with the County Clerk showing the total receipts of the county's clerk's office to have been $3,365.31 and after paying all expenses of the office the balance on hand in the county treasurer's office $352.70.

Superintendent Ouderkirk moved a levy of $10 on Granby for Farmers' Institute.

Supervisor Rowe of Volney moved a levy of $473.45 to pay certificate of indebtedness for the Minetto bridge and $10 for Farmers' Institute.

The special order relative to printing the official canvass was continued until a week from tonight on motion of Supervisor Hydorn.

Supervisor Andelfinger presented a communication from City Chamberlain Chrystal showing the bonded indebtedness from the Oswego and Midland railroad to be $19,000 and the principal and interest due to $31,140; Lake Ontario Share Bonds outstanding, $49,000; amount of principal and interest due, $9,537.50.

Oswego, Dec. 9.—The Board of Supervisors met today and received report from special tuberculosis committee recommending establishment of a tuberculosis hospital in Oswego county. Supervisor W. W. Rounds, chairman of the special committee presented the report and moved that action on the report be made a special order for Friday, December 16, at the request of Mr. Danahey who arranged for a hearing on that day. Adopted.

The report of the special committee follows: To the Honorable Board of Supervisors of Oswego County:

The Legislature of 1909 passed and the Governor signed a bill authorizing the establishment and maintenance by the Board of Supervisors of each county in the State of New York of a County Hospital for Tuberculosis. By resolution a committee was appointed at the last session of the Board of Supervisors to investigate and report to the session of this board in 1910. Such report we now submit for your consideration.

The committee found that the subject has received very little attention in Oswego County, from the fact that consumption has been considered an incurable disease up to a few years ago. We have had to depend on the State Charities Association for very much of the information that we have received.

We find that according to the official statistics there were in 1908 in the State of New York 16,521 deaths from tuberculosis. Sixty of these were from the County of Oswego.

We also find that it is a disease of middle life, one-third of all the deaths between the ages of 15 and 50 in this State are due to tuberculosis.

To us this seems appalling and your committee was much surprised to find that tuberculosis was so prevalent amongst us.

And now that it has been demonstrated that the disease is curable if taken in its early stage it would seem to your committee that the establishment of a dispensary and a sanitarium in this county is one of the most if not the most important questions that will come before this body at its session of the board, for the care of the sick is protection of the well. Those who have made this subject a study have come to the conclusion that the most important step in preventing the spread of tuberculosis is hospital care for persons having the disease. We find that nearly all, if not all of the hospitals refuse to take patients that have tuberculosis on the theory that it is a contagious disease and must be treated as such for the safety of the public.

New York City has reduced its death rate in the last 10 years fifty per cent. which goes to show that with proper care in a very short time this dreaded disease could be wiped out. The cure for tuberculosis is fresh air, perfect rest and proper food and to attain these a place must be provided where the patient may be taught these facts. In view of these facts your committee would recommend that a suitable site be procured and a hospital be built that would accommodate from sixteen to 20 patients at the first, to be enlarged as the need requires it.

Your committee has had different sites offered all of which have been visited. Mr. Phillip V. Danahey visited the different sites with the committee and the advantages and disadvantages of each have been thoroughly looked into and we would recommend that either the Irwin farm situated on the State road West from the city, about one and one-half miles from the bridge or the Lindon place on the West river road about two miles South from the bridge be bought and a hospital built.

Either of the two sites mentioned could be made to meet the counties need for a Hospital at a cost from $7,000 to $10,000 there being on each place a commodious house in good repair that could be used for an administration building. About the only other expense would be the building of open porches or annex for fresh air treatment and the necessary furnishings. All of which is respectfully submitted.

A Christmas Stocking

It Brought an Unexpected Message of Good Cheer

By LUCY K. WYNKOOP

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"De chil'en is gittin' big enough to understand about Christmas now, and I reckon we better git some toys for 'em. Tommy is five year's old, and Pinky is nearly four. De gentleman what visit de house las' month gib me some money for takin' keer ob his horse, and we kin spend it to a first-class Christmas."

"And de lady what was wid him gib me money for washin' some lace clothes. We kin hab a fine Christmas this year. Missy Alice done tole me she gots gib us a turkey."

This conversation occurred between Ben and his wife, Sue, a young couple who were slaves on a plantation in Virginia. The time was a week before Christmas, and preparations were being made both by the whites and by the colored people to celebrate the day. From that moment Ben and Sue spent all the time they were allowed for themselves planning to give their children the first Christmas they had ever known or at least could approach.

The last Christmas little Tommy was ill, and his father and mother were hourly expecting him to be taken away from them by death. That he had been spared to them and was now in good health added zest to their preparations to make the coming celebration the Christmas of their lives. Ben secured a rocking horse for Tommy and smuggled it into the cabin when the children were asleep. Sue bought a doll with a fine china head for Pinky and made the clothes for it herself. Besides the gift of the turkey, a lady living on a neighboring plantation gave them a whole mince pie for their Christmas dinner. A few little things might be expected from the church.

Every night when Ben came home from work Tommy would run out to meet him, and the father would take his child up in his arms and say:

"Christmas comin', honey."

"Wha's Kismas?" the boy would ask, with shining eyes, knowing that it was something enjoyable, but ignorant of its nature.

"Christmas is de day de blessed Lord was bo'n. Fust yo' wake up in de maw'nin' and holler 'Merry Christmas, pop! Merry Christmas, mom! Merry Christmas, Pinky!' and we all holler 'Merry Christmas!' to you. Den we go to de stockin' hangin' to de chimney and see what Santa Clause brung fo' de chil'en. And we take 'em out and gib yo' you's and Pinky hers. Den we hab a fine dinner ob turkey and stuffin' in it and mince pie, and yo' chil'en play wid yo' toys all day. Won't dat be fine?"

And the boy would share his gratification by tightening his arms about his father's neck and covering his face with kisses.

The preparations went on and the anticipations continued to rise till the day before Christmas. Then Ben surprised Sue by coming to the cabin an hour earlier than usual, and the moment she looked at him she knew that something terrible had happened. His face had taken on that sickly hue which in the colored race corresponds to pallor in the whites. He came in and threw himself face down on the bed.

"Oh, Ben," cried his wife, "what is it?"

There was no reply.

"Tell me, Ben! Do tell me what's de matter!"

"Tommy's sold."

The mother dropped as if she had been shot. Ben had been told the news by his master and sent home to break it to the wife and mother. Colonel Torrance, the planter, had for some time intended to get rid of some of the children he owned. He had no idea of doing so at this Christmas season, but a trader had come along, had made an offer of $200 for Tommy, and his master had concluded to accept it.

The southern gentleman planter was usually a kind man, whose slaves were fond of him. But a slave was a chattel representing a certain sum of money, and a thrifty owner would naturally make the most of his capital. Colonel Thomas was one of this class. He disliked to separate families, but under the system of slavery it at times became his interest to do so. And what was his interest he considered his duty to himself and his family.

Ben, hearing his wife fall, sprang up and took her limp body in his arms and laid it on the bed. Just as she came to herself the children toddled into the room and Tommy, seeing that something was the matter, began to cry. This started his sister. The two went to the mother, who, seeing her boy, arose and with a moan took him in her arms.

"Oh, what a Christmas eve!" wailed the father.

There was a rap at the door.

"Don't come in heah!" cried the mother fiercely. "Yo' shan't take me boy! I'll kill him befo' I'll let him be taken away from his mother!"

Nevertheless, the door was opened. The face of a young girl appeared.

"What do you mean, Sue? I haven't come to take your boy. I've come to bring you the turkey for Christmas. Here it is." And she held up a four-pound bird.

"Oh, Missy Alice," said the father, "we don't want no turkey. Dey ain't no Christmas fo' us. De Lawd hab struck us down. Mars' done sold Tommy to a trader, and de trader gwine take him down soof. Take de turkey away, Missy Alice. We ain't got no use fo' it."

The visitor, Alice Wharton, was a girl of twenty, whose face bespoke the kindness of her nature. But over kindness triumphed indignation.

"It is brutal!" she exclaimed.

The mother continued to moan. Several times Alice essayed to speak words of comfort, but her lips refused to say what was untrue. There was no comfort for her to speak. Colonel Torrance prided himself upon his strength of will to do whatever he considered it to be his duty. He had had such unpleasant episodes in his life before and had never shrunk from carrying out his plans. Alice took the hand of the father in one of hers, the mother's hand in the other, pressed them, and with the words, "God help you," turned and left the cabin.

It was, as Ben had said, a melancholy Christmas eve. Little Tommy was put to bed early, his mother lying beside him. On the morrow he would pass out of their lives.

It was near midnight when there came a rap at the door. Ben arose and opened it. A boy stood in the opening, but he was as black as the night and voice say:

"Missy Alice tole me to tote yo' de stockin' fo' to hang up on de chimney. She tals she done tole Santa Claus to bring somepin nice fo' Tommy."

Ben felt a stocking shoved into his hand, heard the departing footsteps, closed the door, hung up the stocking and returned to bed.

When it began to be light Tommy, who did not know that anything had occurred to interfere with Christmas, shouted:

"Merry Christmas, pop! Merry Christmas, mom! Merry Christmas, Pinky!"

The only reply he received from his parents was a sigh. They lay for a while, dreading to get up. It was Christmas day, but the day as well that their little boy was to be taken from them. Finally Ben, urged by the children, arose and uncovered Tommy's rocking horse and Pinky's doll. He glanced at the stocking Miss Wharton had sent, but, seeing that it gave no more sign of contents than when he had hung it up the night before, paid no further attention to it. But Sue, with a woman's inclination for investigation in such matters, took it down, put her hand into it and pulled out a bit of paper. This she opened, and on it in large printed letters that she and Ben could read was written:

Merry Christmas! I have bought Tommy.

The father and mother looked at each other for a moment before the full meaning of the words penetrated their brains; then, taking the two children in their arms, all were united in a single embrace.

In a twinkling all was changed. Miss Wharton now being the owner of Tommy, his parents knew well that he would never be separated from them. The girl was beloved by the colored people, both her father's slaves and those on other plantations, for she devoted all her time to ministering to them. She had a little money of her own, and as soon as she knew of Tommy's sale went to the trader, offered him a good profit on his purchase, it was accepted, and the boy passed into her ownership.

As soon as Ben and Sue felt assured that Miss Wharton had arisen they started for her home to hear the good news from her lips and thank her for having been the means of sparing them a suffering worse than their child's death. She met them with a smile not less happy than their own. Ben tried to speak his thanks, but failed. Sue then tried, but did not get very far before she broke down in tears.

And so it was that the Christmas which came so near being a day of agony was saved to this humble family by an angel of mercy. The children enjoyed the toys and the turkey and the mince pie. But there was in their parents that which did not come of several things, for there was a great comfort of the soul. That which they had most dear had been taken on Christmas eve and returned on Christmas morning.

Tommy remained for several years with his mother, it being his owner's intention to give him free papers as soon as he was of an age to take care of himself. But before that time came around a great change had come over the colored people of the south. It was reserved for another to give Tommy his freedom. Abraham Lincoln one day wrote his name, and all the slaves were free.

Nothing puts a bigger feather in the cap of a society hostess, says the London Saturday Journal, or at the same time causes her more anxious cares and thought than mere expenditure than the presence at one of her dinners or dances in the huge Mayfair mansion of a member of the royal family—most of all the king and queen. The entertaining of royalty is one of the most delicate triumphs the society woman, whether she be a duchess or merely a millionairess, can achieve. It has a code of etiquette all to itself—a code which must be rigidly observed or no hope is there of ever securing another visit from a royal guest of the reigning house. The number of titled and untitled guests bidden to meet the sovereign at, say, a dinner party is strictly limited and of course highly select. On one occasion $20,000 was spent by a hostess in entertaining a crowned head for a week end, while another example is that of a certain baronet who had a marble staircase put in his house solely because of an approaching visit from the late king.

A Handsome Woman

Every woman may not be handsome, but every woman should keep with care the good points nature has given her. No woman need have sallow skin, dull eyes, blotchy complexion, who pays proper attention to her health. Where constipation, liver derangements, blood impurities and other irregularities exist, good complexion, bright eyes and sprightly movements cannot exist. Internal derangements reveal themselves sooner or later on the surface. Headache, dizziness, rings around the eyes, sallow skin, a constant tired feeling—mean that the liver and digestive organs are needing help and correction. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets give this necessary help. They work in nature's own way. They do not merely flush the bowels but tone up the liver and stomach to fulfill their proper functions. So mild and gentle do they act that one hardly realizes that they have taken medicine. Chamberlain's Tablets can be relied upon to relieve indigestion, constipation and dizziness. Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents.

Rheumatism

Can Be Cured

It's a plain, broad statement, but we can prove it. There is a real cure for rheumatism and its sister diseases—

Gout, Gravel, Lumbago and Gout

It is made from the formula of a physician who specialized in rheumatic cases, and who was extraordinarily successful in curing them. This wonderful formula called is now offered broadcast to the vast number of sufferers with rheumatism. Give it a chance to cure your rheumatism.

D. H. Henshaw, Warren, Pa., writes: "Some time ago I sent for a trial bottle of Wintergreen Compound. When I had taken two bottles I could go down stairs with crutches, and now I can go around the house with a cane and am feeling good. Last week I made my garden. I think this is saying a good deal for your medicine, as I had been in bed ten months before taking it."

If your druggist cannot supply you, send us his name and $50. for a regular size bottle fully prepaid. Wintergreen Compound Co., 380 Orange St., Rochester, N. Y.

THE FULTON TIMES

E. K. HUGHES, Editor
W. E. HUGHES, Proprietor

Entered as second class matter, April 13, 1885, at the postoffice at Fulton, New York, under the act of Congress of March 3, 1879.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1910

The recommendation of the Secretary of Agriculture to eliminate middlemen and for cooperative organizations of farmers and cooperative societies of consumers to get together, shortening the distance between the farm and the dinner-table, is well worthy of consideration and action.

The Secretary of Agriculture has now completed his most optimistic of reports. The value of the Agricultural products of the country in 1910 is estimated at $8,96,000,000, and Mr. Wilson says that at no time in the world's history has a country equaled this record. It is quite probable that those even who are now past middle age may see an agricultural output equalling in value one trillion of dollars.

The President's message is the most voluminous ever printed, and is generally considered to be an important and up-to-date document. Few readers will peruse it from end to end, and the epitomes furnished by the press are excellent as time savers. The President earnestly favors the fortification of the Panama Canal, and surely if it is worth digging, it is worth defending. Without fortification it could be destroyed by a few pounds of dynamite in a single night. To fortify the canal is no challenge to the peace of the world. International interests demand its protection.

The Secretary of War has just returned from the Philippines by way of Asia and Europe, bringing the somewhat trite information that our Malayan acquisition from Spain is not fit for self-government. Well, what country ever was fit? The real difference is that the Philippines are less fit, or least fit. It is a positive benediction to some countries like India, Egypt and the Philippines to be governed by an Anglo-Saxon people. All children need guidance and control, and these peoples are not only "half devil and half child," but "devil, ostrich and orphan child in one."

The Pasadena, California, girls refuse to dance with the Japanese naval officers; the ball is called off the Japanese admiral in high dudgeon sails away, and all Japan resents the affront. The Pasadena girls were within their rights and they have the sympathy of California girls and the girls of the United States. But what about this International Exposition for which California and the Pacific coast is clamoring? The support of that Exposition, if held at San Francisco, must come from the Orient. We all know the attitude of San Francisco to the Orient. It very recently brought us to the verge of war with Japan, and there are possibilities of serious trouble in an International Exposition held on the Pacific slope.

There is expectation that the recently elected congress will be less under the hypnotism of the express companies and more mindful of the popular demand for a parcels post than past Congresses have been. The President in his message urges legislation authorizing the Post-Office Department to transport packages in the mails at reasonable rates with reasonable limitations as to bulk and weight. The present mailing conditions are most unreasonable, having been dictated by the express companies to throw the cream of the carrying business in their direction. The backwardness of our country in this modern postal facility is shameful, for the parcels post is extant even in such countries as China, Japan, Africa, Australia, Asia Minor, Turkey and Korea, to say nothing of European countries.

Mixed Motives.

"Few motives in this world can be pure. That is our great trouble," said a lecturer. "A clerk wept bitterly on the bench one stormy day while out on a boiling sea tossed a cockleshell of a fishing boat wherein sat his employer. As the clerk watched with wild eyes the little boat, now buried under white foam, now shooting forward gallantly, now buried again, he clasped his hands and cried in great anguish, 'If that boat sinks I'll lose my job.'"

A Remarkable Escape.

During the reign of terror in Paris one of the most remarkable escapes was that of M. de Chateaubrun. He was sent to execution with twenty other prisoners, but after the fifteenth head had fallen the guillotine got out of order and a workman was sent for to repair it. The six remaining victims were left standing in front of the machines with their hands tied behind them. A French crowd is very curious, and the people kept pressing forward to see the man arranging the guillotine. By degrees M. de Chateaubrun, who was to the rear of his companions, found himself in the front line of the spectators, then in the second and finally well behind those who had come to see his head cut off. Before the men could get the guillotine in working order night began to fall, and M. de Chateaubrun slipped away. When in the Champs Elysees he told a man that a wag had tied his hands and robbed him of his hat, and this simple individual set him free. A few days later M. de Chateaubrun escaped from France.

Crockett's Revenge.

There is a story of Crockett of "Stickit Minister" fame to the effect that when he offered his first volume to a Scotch firm it was returned with a polite note assuring him that there was no market for that sort of thing. The letter was marked "No. 396b." In later years when the same publishers asked him for one of his manuscripts he politely requested them to refer to their previous correspondence with him marked "396b."

THE CURTAIN FALLS

By Margaret E. Sappister

Over the sorrow, and over the bliss,
Over the tear drop, over the kiss,
Over the crimes that blotted and blurred,

Over the wound of the angry word,
Over the deeds in weakness done,
Over the battles lost and won,
Now at the end of the flying year,
Year that tomorrow will not be here.

Over our freedom, over our thralls,
In the dark and the midnight, the curtain falls.

Over our gain and over our loss,
Over our crown and over our cross,
Over the fret of our discontent,
Over the ill that we never meant,
Over the scars of our self-denial,
Over the strength that conquered trial.

Now in the end of the flying year,
Year that tomorrow will not be here,
Quietly final, the prompter calls;
Over it swiftly the curtain falls.

Over the crowds and the solitudes,
Over our shifting, hurrying moods,
Over the hearts where bright flames leap;
Over the cribs where the babies sleep,
Over the clamor, over the strife,
Over the pageantry of life,
Now in the end of the flying year,
Year that tomorrow will not be here,
Swiftly and surely, from starry walls,
Silently downward the curtain falls.

ENGINEER RIPLEY TO REMAIN

The following letter received by Hon. T. C. Sweet on Thursday from State Engineer Williams will be most pleasing reading for Mr. Ripley's friends in this city. All of whom were apprehensive that the establishment of a Residency in Oswego might mean Mr. Ripley's transfer to another section.

December 6, 1910.
Hon. T. C. Sweet,
Phoenix, N. Y.

Dear Sir: I have at hand your letter of December 6th, with reference to the re-establishment of a Resident Engineer's office at Oswego. In this connection permit me to advise you that I have no thought of removing Mr. Ripley, the present Resident Engineer, with offices at Fulton, and would state that he will be retained in charge of this residency and be in charge of all work south of Fulton, including Barge Canal Contract No. 10.

With the letting of the Barge Canal

Contract No. 37, it was in my opinion for the best interest of the State to re-establish the Resident Engineer's office at Oswego, in order that Contracts 35 and 37, comprising the principal work on this residency, might be given proper attention by this department.

It has always been the intention of this department to have the Resident Engineer's office for Contracts 35 and 37 at Oswego, and on account of Contract 37, not having been let at an earlier date the work on Contract No. 35 was not placed under the jurisdiction of the Resident Engineer located at Fulton.

This division of the work formerly under Resident Engineer Ripley does not cast any reflection upon the services rendered by Mr. Ripley, and the re-establishment of this Residency is, as I have stated above, for the purpose of giving proper supervision to the Barge Canal work along the Oswego Canal.

Very truly yours,
Frank M. Williams

JAMES W. BURT DEAD

James W. Burt, one of the leading residents of Hamhat for the past forty years, and a prominent merchant died Sunday afternoon, December 1. Mr. Burt had been in failing health for the past year and though his death was expected, came as a shock to the bereaved family and to the community where he had been such a prominent and influential figure so long.

Mr. Burt was one of the organizers at the Republican party in the fifties and had always been a loyal supporter of its men and principles ever since. For many years he has been a leader in town and county affairs where his judgment and advice were always sought and carefully considered. He was always in close touch with the people and knew and respected their wishes.

Mr. Burt never sought office for himself but had on many occasions used his influence for his friends. He regarded his promises as sacred and met and stood for them always. Whatever position he took in regard to public affairs was always clear and definite.

He is survived by his wife and two children, Mrs. James Jackson of Buffalo, and a son James Burt, who has conducted the clothing business with his father for the past 20 years.

A WOMAN'S GREAT IDEA

is how to make herself attractive. But, without health, it is hard for her to be lovely in face, form or temper. A weak, sickly woman will be nervous and irritable. Constipation and kidney poisons show in pimples, blotches, skin eruptions and a wretched complexion. But Electric Bitters always prove a godsend to women who want health, beauty and friends. They regulate Stomach, Liver and Kidneys, purify the blood; give strong nerves, bright eyes, pure breath, smooth, velvety skin, lovely complexion, good health. ## Raising the Limit

A Story of What Happened on Christmas Eve

By Jeanne Olive Loizeaux

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

It was Christmas eve in a city. The rich were preparing by the expenditure of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of dollars to enjoy the festivities, those in moderate circumstances picking out what they did not have by working with their own hands, the poor—alas, the poor—going without the joys others were blessed with, except where the good Lord sent some benevolent person to hunt them up and bestow upon them a dinner or a few toys for the children—the children that it would seem Christmas is especially for.

The streets were crowded with belated purchasers, some buying decorations, some gifts of value, some a few simple toys. The spirit of Christmas was among them, within them. A father had forgotten that he had promised Jimmie a jackknife, a mother that Lucy must have a set of dishes; brothers and sisters remembered at the last moment some forgotten article and were hurrying hither and thither to supply the deficiency. There were lovers who had but lately plighted their troth carrying home gifts.

Big Jim could not escape the hurry.

the laughter, the packages laden through. He hated the bedecked windows, the greetings, even the strings of turkeys and chickens in the market windows. He hated Christmas time. And, worst of all, he hated the word home. And it was being rubbed in. Why not let bygones be? For two years he had not even heard of his mother, and then she had written that Mariana had married John Foster. That was natural, of course. John had stayed by his job, and John was not dependent on cards mainly for a living.

Big Jim, with his hands in his pockets, fingered the roll of bills and the loose money, over $300. He had been lucky last night, but tonight, like as not, Shorty or some one would get it away from him. He turned down a side street and cursed beneath his breath as a little Italian with a basket on his shoulder proffered him a small plaster Christ. He thrust out his chin and passed Charley's place, for he had already reached his limit in drinks. That chin kept him from passing his set limit in anything. He was no weakling. He kept his word and was bad by choice, not through lack of will.

The very sleighbells jingled "home," and he hated to think of himself in that connection. He would have gone to his boarding house, but no one, save perhaps Shorty, who had deserted his wife, would be there—they all had wives or kids or mothers or some girl to make merry with, to be kind to, if only once a year. Then into the city clangor came the beat of a drum and a singing and strumming—the Salvation Army. In their march they stopped near him—he could catch the words of the high, coarse tenor:

"Come home! Come home! Why don't you all come home?"

The song finished, he caught words of the baritone begun by a young girl with a clear voice.

"Yes, come home! Come back to your real selves! Quit your sin, your drinkin' an' gamblin' an' be decent, boys! It pays! It pays, girls! Go home to your mothers! Sin ain't pleasure, an' it costs dear in tears an' human misery! Come home!" He slunk away disgustedly. It seemed there was no escape.

It was too early to play poker. Well, he could go to the postoffice at least for his mail. But here, too, was Christmas—hurrying crowds, laughter. And, escaping a bevy of young girls, he ran into and nearly knocked over a shabby old woman, sweet faced, wistful eyed, with trembling mittened hands. He put her on her feet again almost tenderly, apologizing, but she peered up into his face—a kind face with good eyes in spite of all.

"I was waitin' for my girl," she began with the volubility of lonely age. "I ain't heard from her in a year, my Molly. She would be sure to come for letters Christmas time, wouldn't she, think?" "Praps you know her, Mary Shane?" she asked eagerly, not minding his shake of the head. "She's pretty, is Molly, with big blue eyes an' curly yellow hair, an' little, like a doll. Do you s'pose somethin' happened her? She might—just forget to write, mightn't she? They said she hadn't worked to the store for six months! Do you s'pose—she's—dead?" The cracked old voice was a mere whisper. The young man's heart softened.

"I'll tell you," he answered, "I expect she's all right—married and safe, likely, being so pretty—and good!" The mother snatched gratefully at the words. "Married an' safe, I reckon," she repeated. "An' so happy she's forgettin' to write—married an' safe! An'—good!"

"So you go home," he advised. "You will hear from her all right if you wait. You'll get sick here." He left her and at the door ran head-on into Shorty. He was glad to see even Shorty, although that worthy had "a grouse on." The two went down the street together and paused at an alley where newsboys, with an eye out for the police, were shooting craps.

"Their game's more fun than ours and quicker," growled Shorty, "and matchin' pennies is quicker yet and even more intelligent. I'm tired of bein' a fool. I've got $300 in the world in this roll. I'll match pennies, two out of three for it. Heads! What you got?"

"Two hundred dollars. I'll go you!" They stooped to the pavement and matched. Big Jim's luck held. Silently the other handed over the roll. Jim laughed shortly.

"I'll raise the limit in this 'gentlemen's game.' Two out of three the winner—to quit this life and be decent!" Shorty nodded. "Settle down and earn a livin' an' get married to-night! An' go home an' behave!"

Again Shorty nodded, but he amended: "The loser to end it all. He jerked his thumb in the direction of the river. Big Jim reached his hand, and the men shook hands. Just then a policeman sauntered past, importantly eyeing them. The newsboys scattered. Then the two stooped again in the electric light and matched pennies on the pavement. It was Jim's luck again. Shorty laughed, a little enviously.

"You're a square sport, Jim. You'll keep your word." Then he turned on his heel toward the river.

Jim stood thinking awhile till a policeman passing bade him "move on." Then he passed slowly back toward the main street. It had grown full evening, and the crowd had thickened—the last night before Christmas. He was pushed to the edge of the walk, where people had gathered thick as bees round a fleeing queen. The drum was beat log—the Salvation Army again! A few men were laughing, all trying to see. Jim shouldered his way to the front. The soldiers had surrounded an overdressed young girl and knelt about her. Her cheeks were crimson with excitement. She had not yet got to rouge. Her curling yellow hair extravagantly dressed was blowing in the wind; tears rolled down her babyish face. She was very pretty and little, like a doll.

He knew the girl. It was Babe Shannon. He caught her eye, and she crimsoned a deeper hue.

"Come to yourself! Come home!" pleaded the soldiers. "Go back to your mother! Be good! Nothing else pays!" She nodded assent to them.

"I'll go home—but let me out of here now." They yielded reluctantly, but the young man forced himself to her and took her arm. She shook off his touch like fire.

"It's you and your like have brought me here," she flamed. "I've promised to go home, and I can't. I ask you: Can I? What chance would I have? My mother?" But he seized her arm again and walked her rapidly away from the curious crowd down a side street, where it was quieter.

"Babe," he pleaded, "I'm not much. I ain't fit, but if you'll marry me we'll begin square. You give me a chance and I'll give you one." She faced him in astonishment and unbelief.

"My name ain't Babe; it's Molly. What do you mean, talking about getting married? A year ago—just a year ago—if you'd said that it would have saved me. Now?"

"Now—it will save both of us. I mean it, Molly. You're a thousand times too good for me. But marry me and I'll take you home and I'll stick by you. You can tell your mother you've been married a year. You ought to have been, and we'll make it true." Her eyes searched his face, and he pushed back his hat to help her, to give her a chance at his eyes—kind, steady eyes, too old for so young a man, but still clear. The girl knew she could trust them. Suddenly she put her arm up before her face and began to cry, but she nodded through her tears.

"Marry me tonight," he said, "and tomorrow I'll take you home. I'll wake everybody and get a license, and I'll take care of you. We've got $200 to begin on. Come to the postoffice first." He drew her along with him. Once inside, she waited while he made out and sent an order for $300 and mailed it to Shorty's wife. Then with a smile he turned to the girl, who made shift to smile back at him. He took her hand and, holding her close to his side, again went out upon the street. But this time he was no gloaming loiterer—he had a license to procure, a justice of the peace or a preacher to find. And then at the station they would buy tickets for home; there would be time to ask her where home might be.

As they swung past the corner the stout, velvet voiced Italian from the store in his basket offered the man a small plaster image of the Christ child. Big Jim tossed the man a dollar and put the little symbol of good will to men into Molly Shane's willing hand. Her lips murmured a silent prayer—a prayer that they might be good again, that she might be good. She made silent vows of immaculate wifehood. And she knew that, being good, they would find their happiness together.

With an Eye to the Future.

"It would probably take many generations of adversity to train Americans into the farseeing thriftiness of my people," once observed an American of Scotch birth. "I remember a case of a Scotchwoman who had been promised a new bonnet by a lady. Before she undertook the purchase the lady called and asked the good woman:

"Would you rather have a felt or a straw bonnet, Mrs. Carmichael?"

"Weel," responded Mrs. Carmichael thoughtfully, "I think I'll tak' a straw one. It'll maybe be a mouthfu' to the coo when I'm done wi' it."—Lippincott's.

From my own experience I cannot praise them enough."

PROTECTED BY CIVIL SERVICE

Less Than Twenty Per Cent. of State Positions go to Democrats. About 14,000 People on State Pay Roll but Only About One-Fifth of Them will Lose Their Places.

Albany, Dec. 9.—Of the 14,000 or so persons on the State pay roll, probably less than 20 per cent. will have to look for new jobs after January 1st, when the Democrats take charge of affairs at Albany.

The Civil Service has been extended rapidly during the past few years. It now covers practically every State department and, with comparatively few exceptions, the positions of each of these departments have been placed in the "competitive" class, and so are reasonably safe from removal by a change of the party in power.

In the "unclassified" and exempt classes, however, there are hundreds of lucrative positions, practically all of which are at the disposal of the new administration to distribute as it sees fit. The "unclassified" divison includes all offices filled by the Legislature on joint ballot; all legislative officers and employees, all offices filled by appointment by the Governor either upon or without the confirmation of the Senate; all election officers and the head or heads of any department of the government, etc. The "exempt" class (meaning exempt from the civil service examination) comprises the deputies of the principal executive offices authorized by law; one secretary of each officer, board and commission authorized to appoint a secretary, one clerk and one deputy clerk, if authorized by law, of each court, and one clerk of each elective judicial officer. Also all unskilled laborers or skilled laborers not included in the competitive class.

The competitive class takes in all positions for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examination and it is in this class that about 75 per cent of the total number of employees have been placed.

THE REASON

After a great deal of worry and study, the editor has at last figured out how so many country editors get rich. Here is the secret of their success. There is a child born in the neighborhood. The attending physician gets $10. The editor gives the loud lunged youngster a great sendoff and gets $0. It is christened, and the minister gets $5 and the editor gets $0. It grows and marries. The editor publishes another long winded, flowery article and tells a dozen lies about the "beautiful and accomplished bride." The minister gets $10 and a piece of cake. The editor gets $0.00 and a request to carry the groom's subscription account another year. In the course of time he dies. The doctor gets from $5 to $100, the editor publishes a notice of death and an obituary two columns long, lodge resolutions, a lot of poetry and a card of thanks and gets $0.00. No wonder so many country editors get rich.—Ex.

POSTAGE REDUCTION

Cleveland, Dec. 9.—Announcement was today made of a nation-wide movement for the reduction of letter postage from 2 cents to 1 cent per ounce. ## COSTLY KISSES AT CHRISTMAS

AT a Christmas dinner given every year to the old folks of Hanley, the capital of the potteries district in England, a quaint ceremony is regularly observed.

At the conclusion of the meal one of the oldest of the women guests advances to the platform and kisses the mayor on both cheeks. His worship gallantly returns the salute, and the exchange of kisses continues until all the more venerable dames present have been thus honored.

In large business establishments, where the assistants live in, a great deal of kissing goes on at Christmas time. Some of the more daring spirits among the male "hands" have been known to make bets with one another as to the number of different girls they would kiss between Christmas eve and New Year's eve.

In a certain London drapery house two or three seasons ago one of these "horrid males" made a record by saluting seventeen different damsels. But he found the game was not worth the candle, for, in addition to a scratched face and a pretty severe pomeling at the hands of a victim's sweetheart, the rash youth found his services dispensed with.

At another great emporium one Christmas indiscriminate kissing created so much trouble that more than a dozen young men were dismissed. Ever since in this particular establishment even the introduction of a sprig of mistletoe during the festive season has been enough to insure instant dismissal.

A girl who appeared with a sprig of it in her blouse was ordered to put on her things and leave at once. A playful young man who merely pretended to kiss a young lady assistant was hurried off the premises with his hat and overcoat in his hand.

The Lancashire factory maid has a little kissing custom all her own that is sacred to Christmas. At this special period she will kiss an overcooker or any other male "hand" in the expectation that she will be rewarded with a shilling for her temerity.

Woe betide the ungallant worker who fails to part with the coin. He will find his coat sleeves sewed up or nailed to the wall, if the girl herself does not do this for her fellow workers.

Some of the more venturesome have been known to "get their employer round the neck" and kiss him, but the risks are great. If he takes the liberty kindly he will part with a sovereign; if otherwise he will part with the kisser. In one instance the master was so furious at being kissed that he closed his works until New Year's day, thus mauling the hands in a week's wages.

SEE WILL KISS ANY MALE "HAND."

A ludicrous story is told of a young Japanese engineering apprentice in connection with the Christmas custom of kissing. He was serving his time in the north of England and was astonished when a waitress at the dining room which he regularly frequented kissed him under the mistletoe.

On his being explained to him that a present was expected in return, he suggested a pair of gloves. The damsel, however, had heard that he was immensely wealthy and gently hinted that something for her neck would be more acceptable. When the present arrived next day she conjured up visions of a pearl necklace as she tremblingly undid the parcel. Then was disclosed to her disappointed gaze a Jap's idea of "something for her neck." It took the shape of a bar of soap.

It is interesting to recall a strange Christmas kissing custom that in times gone by was regularly observed at a certain London hostelry. This was a house known as the Pied Bull in Clerkenwell, the landlord of which was under an obligation to bestow on every woman who came in before noon and kissed him a given measure of ale. If records can be relied on "mine host" had no lack of lady customers on the festive morn.—Tit-Bits.

FEDERAL BUILDING

Congressman Charles L. Knapp writes regarding the project and the progress it has attained thus far in official circles.

Fulton residents make frequent inquiry regarding the proposed Federal building project in our city. A recent letter sent by Postmaster Hughes to Congressman Charles L. Knapp, who has been most energetic in his advocacy of the measure, has been honored with the following encouraging reply, which cannot fail to be pleasing news to our residents:

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., Dec. 12, 1910. Mr. William B. Hughes, Postmaster, Fulton, N. Y.

My Dear Mr. Hughes: In reply to your inquiry with reference to the proposed Federal building at Fulton, permit me to say that both the appropriation for the site and the construction of the building have been made and the site purchased and that the appropriation for the construction of the building will be available when the specifications are completed and work entered upon by the Department, so that further legislation in the matter is unnecessary. The delay with reference to the construction of the building is one incident to many buildings and in this case is occasioned by the contention over the selection of the site. The Department gives each site a number when the purchase is completed and the site selected so that specifications and drawings may be made for a building on that particular site.

The appropriation for this site was made in 1903, but owing to the contention over the question of site, the purchase was not completed until March 10, 1910, this building thus taking No. 106, for which delay, I know you will permit me to say, that I was not responsible, as I urged haste by both parties and the Department.

The appropriation of $75,000 for the building was made June 25, 1910, and as stated, is available when the plans and specifications are made. The Department is able to make specifications and plans at the rate of about ten a month so that it will be several months before these plans and specifications can be completed.

But whatever the necessary delay in this connection may be, the people of Fulton can feel assured that a public building is secured to them. The appropriation of $75,000 being made available when the Department reaches the making of the plans and specifications necessarily delayed in the selection of a site, the work will proceed rapidly and I have no doubt will be satisfactory to the residents of Fulton.

Very sincerely yours,
CHARLES L. KNAPP.

BUY A DIAMOND FOR XMAS

G. B. Farley, the first street jeweler, never sold so many diamonds in his business career as he is selling this year. His long experience as a diamond expert is becoming more fully recognized each year and his sales attest to the splendid values he gives in the precious stones. ## FIRE OF INCENDIARY ORIGIN

F. C. Wolever's Home Entered by Burglars on Saturday Night, Silver and Cut Glass Stolen. House Set on Fire by Robbers. Loss Heavy. Three Firemen Injured.

About 8 o'clock on Sunday morning smoke was seen issuing from Mr. F. C. Wolever's beautiful home in Broadway. Upon the door being broken down a hot blaze was discovered within and the fire department was hastily summoned to the scene. The flames had gained such headway that they could not be conquered until the house had been gutted and practically everything destroyed.

Mr. Wolever has been remodeling his house and with his wife, who is ill, he had been staying at the home of Mrs. Wolever's sister, Mrs. W. J. Bradford. On Saturday at midnight Mr. Wolever was at the burned house to attend to the furnace and left everything right. During the work of remodeling the house one room had been converted into a safe deposit place for silver, cut glass, pictures and other things of value. When Mr. Wolever last visited the house he left everything intact in this room which was locked. Upon investigating when the firemen went into the house, the silver and cut glass were missing. It is supposed from this fact that burglars entered the house on Saturday night or early on Sunday morning and either carelessly or with intent set fire to the structure. Fire was found simultaneously under the kitchen sink and in the second floor. The house and contents were insured for $2,000, the value being more than $5,500.

During the progress of the fire three firemen were thrown fifteen feet from a roof to the ground by a chimney falling. As it slid it struck Assistant Chief Rude and Firemen Frank Dwyer and George Rebeor. Mr. Rude was badly bruised and shaken by the fall; Rebeor escaped with a slight shaking up, but Dwyer was so unfortunate as to sustain a compound fracture of his left ankle.

Are you insured? If not, see C. W. Streeter, insurance agent, tomorrow.

SAVE ALL YOU CAN

There seems to be in the minds of the insuring public an erroneous impression as to their duties in case of fire.

If a neighbors house was on fire and you knew he had no insurance, you would do all you could to save his property. It is the duty of every man at any and all times whether insured or not, by so doing the neighbor's insurance is in no way affected.

Had this course been pursued at the recent fire, our neighbor would have been at least $1,000 better off today. Anything saved is NOT deducted from the policy and insurance companies are very willing to pay for damage by removal.

TO CONTEST WILL

Oswego, Dec. 12.—When the will of Richard Frazier was offered for probate in Surrogate's Court at Oswego today it was announced that objections would be filed by Mrs. Nellie Waters, a grand daughter of the deceased. Surrogate Miller gave Mrs. Waters until Thursday to file the same. For many years Mr. Frazier was one of the best known farmers of the town of Granby and left an estate amounting to between $3,000 and $4,000, which he willed to his children and some favorite grandchildren. Mrs. Waters alleges that he was not competent to make a will and that undue influence was used. She also claims that the testator promised that he would leave her the sum of $1,000 at his death, providing she would come to his house and perform the house work for him. This she says she did until she was married to William Waters several years ago.

Postmaster General Hitchcock, in his annual report to Congress, advocates most strongly the adoption of a limited parcels post service on rural routes throughout this country. Our government is already a party to a treaty whereby an international arrangement has been made for an exchange parcels post service with forty-three countries. The rate is 12 cents a pound, 4 cents less than is charged in our own domestic service. The weight allowed in most of the foreign countries is eleven pounds. In the United States it is four. As a result, a parcel may be mailed from Santa Fe to Smyrna, Dalmy, Wei-hai-wei or Montevideo, which cannot be posted to Dallas, Denver or New York. Parcels can be sent from Berlin to Brooklyn that cannot be sent from New York to Brooklyn. Certainly our citizens are entitled to all the benefit a parcels post would confer. The plan can be put in operation with little or no expense to the government.

SCOTT'S 900

J. H. Stewart of Utica street during the Civil War, served in Scott's 900. He enlisted in Lyander under Captain Stanson. In the beginning of the war this regiment was on duty in Washington as President Lincoln's body guard. They were eventually consolidated with the 11th N. Y. Cavalry a short time before they were discharged and in 1863 were ordered down to New Orleans to the Department of the Gulf. The expedition consisted of twelve hundred and forty men and one hundred and forty horses, requiring twelve sailing vessels to carry them. They had to endure the usual hardships of sea sickness. They were divided into sections and sent through different states of the South as scouts to look after guerrillas, a dangerous class of troops that were doing much damage and causing considerable trouble in different directions. This was considered a dangerous part of the service during the war and meant roughing it with many hardships, skirmishes and surprises through the enemies country. This regiment was raised from different sections and comrade Stewart is said to be the only surviving member of that regiment in this section. At the time they reached New Orleans, I was stopping at the Soldier's Home there for three days awaiting transportation up the river to Franklino. I met Tom Lake there, our former drum major, and he told me he had come down again as musician in Scott's 900. S. D. Gardner.

USED UNIQUE METHOD

Mrs. Trebesa Brown, Deaconess of the First M. E. church is acting as a good samaritan in different parts of the city. She deserts a Carnegie medal for her bravery in the hard snow storm last Thursday evening. She and Miss Emma Breads were returning from church in the storm, the snow having fallen several inches deep when between E. S. Brown's and Charles M. Allen's, in Third street Miss Breads lost a valuable pair of nose glasses in the snow. Mr. Allen assisted in a vain search for them. Mrs. Brown went to H. J. Wilson's, obtained a lantern and garden rake and went back alone in the storm and raked out the glasses. Miss Breads being in delicate health had gone home. G.

DONE BY A WOMAN

If you have not seen the Futhill cut glass, handled exclusively in this city by Farley, First street, you have never really seen cut glass. This glass is designed and passed upon by a woman and she rejects in the plain glass forms any and all not absolutely flawless. She then personally inspects the finished article with the same care as she exercises in the first instance, the result being an article as clear, beautiful and brilliant as a diamond, but not costly. The line carried by Mr. Farley excites the keenest admiration on the part of all who have seen it. In the lot are vases, plates, rose glasses, salad dishes, etc., at prices from $5 up.

FULTON POST OFFICE BUSY

Monday was a red-letter day in the Fulton Postoffice, bearing conclusive evidence that the Holiday season's business had started, making "countless thousands" happy. A total of 100 money orders were issued and paid on the day mentioned, as follows: Issued, Foreign, 10; domestic, 67, total 77; Paid, domestic, 23, grand total, 100. The Syracuse office boasts that one year ago 131 money orders had been issued and paid, and, in addition, claims that last Monday's business would exceed that number. The Fulton office, comparing both cities in population, furnishes the foregoing excellent showing in money order business.

At the Oswego Falls station on Monday the number of money orders issued was 29 domestic, making the total as great by two orders, as the number issued by the Syracuse Post Office.

We sell all the late styles in men's shoes. Morton & Shattuck.

ESMOND ADDENDA

Editor Times: A recent letter from Robert B. McCully, that loyal son of Fulton, concerning our common friend, Richard Esmond, incites me to forward the major part of its contents to the Times, for I am sure other folks will be pleased to see anything pertaining to the life and career of one who, as boy and young man, ever lived in the village of Fulton. To begin with Robert says he was about seven years old when he first met "Dick" and that, thence onward, they were great friends and that, aside from George Ward, he was about the only Fulton boy with whom he never had a fight. Robert's going in the State, made him an earlier volunteer than Esmond. During the twenty years of his living in New York, and when Norm Cooper was in Brooklyn, the three used to meet frequently. "Dick" was exceedingly popular and was conceded to be the handsomest G. A. R. man in Gotham; he had commanded his, Sumner Post, three terms and was well known by all of the Posts in the city. He died November 7, in Roosevelt Hospital, immediate cause, hemorrhage; having been in failing health for more than a year. McCully attended the funeral services which were Thursday evening, November 10, in the large hall over Merritt's undertaking rooms and there were present about 150 Comrades and a third as many Ladies of the Grand Army. Esmond's daughter, Mrs. Woolworth of Denver, Colorado, and the widow and daughter of Esmond's brother, Fred, were the only members of his family there. It was his wish and request that his remains should be cremated, but the body was buried in Herkimer, the home of his second wife and son. This seems to tell about the whole story, but to those who knew the schoolboy and soldier, there will be added interest in the village on the Mohawk. I was teaching, a few miles north of the place, when the fever of enlistment struck me and to the railroad station in the town, my father drove me on that cold January morning, when I essayed the soldier's life and it was to Herkimer that I came, weak, worn and hungry many moons afterwards, from more than seven long months in a rebel-prison, and was carried by a stranger to the Middleville parsonage that I might greet my home again; so the place is already hallowed in my mind and memory, but it will hereafter have additional interest to me, in that it contains the grave of my old friend and comrade, "Dick" Esmond.

DELIGHTFUL SOCIETY EVENT PLANNED

Invitations have been issued by the Citizen's club to a large number of Fultonians and out-of-town guests for a reception and ball to be given in the club rooms in the city hall on Wednesday evening, December 23. Good music will be in attendance and a right merry social time is anticipated. The event is opportunely timed to take place during the period when the young people are home from colleges, the business men and women from away are spending a week with friends here and the residents are rested from Xmas and ready for frivolity.

An innovation this year is that tickets may be purchased in advance from either of the Entertainment Committee, Messrs. T. H. Webb, T. M. Ripley, S. B. Mead, W. C. Burns and A. J. Rice.

The floor committee is composed of Messrs. G. W. Morton, F. B. Ditt, B. W. Bennett, and the refreshments will be in charge of Mrs. Desaut.

CURRENT EVENTS CLUB

On Monday evening the Current Events Club met at the home of Mrs. Mary L. Emerick.

In the absence of the President of the Club, the Vice-president, Hon. N. N. Stranahan presided.

The programme for the evening was a debate on the question of the establishment of a Parcels Post System. By way of introduction to this subject, Judge Wilson gave a brief summary of the President's message, showing, among other things, the President's position on the subject of a Parcels Post. The affirmative of the proposition that a Parcels Post should be established was maintained by Rev. F. A. Miller, seconded by Engineer T. M. Ripley. Prof. George Duell led the opposition and called upon Senator Stranahan to support him in his contention against the establishment of a Parcels Post.

By agreement between the contestants, no decision was rendered, but it was the general consensus of opinion that a Parcels Post would eventually be established.

Following the debate, a motion prevailed that the next meeting of the Club be postponed one week, thus changing the date from January 2, to January 9, 1911.

BANQUET A SUCCESS

The banquet tendered Postmaster Alexander by the clerks and carriers in the Oswego post office on Thursday evening, was a very delightful success and it must have warmed the cockles of Mr. Alexander's heart to witness the spirit of friendliness and co-operation which existed between the head of the Federal office and the assistants. Many toasts were responded to, Mr. Alexander giving a resume of the growth of postal matters from his first experience in conducting a post office in war camp, to the present day.

Mr. Alexander's third term as post master is about to expire and all present at the banquet joined in expressing the hope that he might receive a re-appointment to the office which he had so acceptably filled for twelve years.

OPPOSITION TO STRINGING WIRES

Fulton Attorney Secures Injunction From Judge Rowe

Claude E. Gulle of Fulton appeared before County Judge Louis C. Rowe this morning and obtained an injunction restraining the erection of polls and stringing of wires in the streets of Fulton for the distribution of Niagara power. Mr. Gulle represented the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company. The injunction was obtained on the ground that the question of the right to a franchise in Fulton was now in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court and that there had been no decision rendered in the matter and that no permission had been obtained from the State Public Service Commission. ### TAKEN FOR BARGE CANAL

Among the claims just filed against the State with the State Court of Claims is one by Albert Lamson and others, of Granby, Oswego County, for $1,054, for permanent appropriation of land, taken for the barge canal.

CANAL SUIT APPEAL

Judgement Previously Rendered by Court of Claims in Favor of Fulton Company for $354,600—Arrangement to Bear on Canal's Cost. Albany, Dec. 14.—An action which will have an important bearing on the final cost of the barge canal project was argued last Wednesday in the Court of Appeals. It was an appeal by the state from a judgement rendered by the State Court of Claims for $354,600 in favor of the Fulton Light, Heat and Power Company for property and water rights taken for the barge canal at Fulton.

The state is contesting the contention of the Court of Claims that the company's title extended to the bed of the Oswego river, instead of the bank of the river, and that it was entitled to an award for water rights.

The Attorney General argued that, irrespective of the ownership of the bed of the river, the state was entitled to use the bed and water for the improvement of navigation without compensation, by virtue of the paramount right to control navigation.

Mr. O'Malley declared that if the court holds that certain privileges had ripened into vested rights, the cost of the barge canal would be enormously increased, and such a decision would have the effect of deterring the water storage undertaking which is now being carried on in its initial stages by the state.

Various claims, involving practically the same questions, are pending against the state. Charles A. Collin of New York appeared for the company.

THE PRAYER OF A HORSE

To thee, my master, I offer my request. Feed me, water and care for me, and when the day's work is done provide me with shelter, a clean dry bed and a stall wide enough for me to lie down in comfort. Talk to me; your voice often means as much to me as the reins; pet me sometimes, that I may serve you more gladly and learn to love you. Do not jerk the reins and do not whip me when going up hill. Never strike, beat or kick me when I do not understand what you mean, but give me a chance to understand you. Watch me, and if I fail to do your bidding see if something is not wrong with my harness. See if the shoes on my feet are properly fitted. Examine my teeth when I do not eat. I may have an ulcerated tooth, and that, you know, is very painful. Do not tie my head in an unnatural position or take away my only defence against flies and mosquitoes by cutting my tail; and finally my dear master, when my useful strength is gone do not turn me out to starve or freeze or sell me to some cruel owner to be slowly tortured and starved to death but do thou, my master, take my life in the kindest way and your God will reward you here and hereafter. May you not consider me a servant if I ask this in the name of Him Who was born in a stable. You may favor that noble servant by taking it to Perkins's shop for his shoes. Opposite City Hall.

PAST MASTER

PUTNAM HONORED

Last evening in Masonic Hall the annual election of officers was held. After the election of officers Attorney Claude E. Gulle presented Mr. E. A. Putnam, who had been Master of Hiram Lodge since 1907, with a beautiful Past Master's jewel of gold with sapphire. This is the first time in the history of Hiram Lodge that a retiring Master has been thus honored and it was a fitting testimonial of Mr. Putnam's untiring zeal in his office. Painstaking and conscientious, he has typified in his every official act Masonry in its highest sense. He has given much time and energy to the discharge of duty and it was reluctantly that his fellow members permitted him to leave the chair he had so well filled.

The jewel was presented him by the members of the lodge and Mr. Putnam was taken completely by surprise, but recovered himself sufficiently to return thanks for the spirit manifested toward him. The jewel was a beautiful specimen of the jeweler art, being purchased from the William C. Morgan store and artistically engraved by his engraver, Mr. F. G. Harding. Upon the bar appeared "E. A. Putnam, 1907-1910." On the back was engraved, "Presented by members of Hiram Lodge, No. 144, F. & A. M., Fulton, N. Y."

CITY OF FULTON, as:

I hereby certify that the above resolutions were duly adopted at a meeting of the Common Council of the City of Fulton held at the City Hall on the 14th day of December, 1910.

Approved this 14th day of December, 1910.

TUBERCULOSIS SITE

Friday of last week a meeting was held in the City Hall for the purpose of giving greater impetus to the anti-tuberculosis sentiment in this city. There are a large number of deaths from the "white plague" each year in this immediate vicinity and our citizens are becoming more actively interested in the prevention and the cure since the matter has been so conspicuously exploited by the State organizations.

Mr. H. L. Paddock was elected president of the newly created organization and the vice presidents are Arvin Rice, A. L. Warner and A. G. Gilbert. Dr. E. A. Gladman was elected secretary and L. W. Emerick, treasurer.

Upon motion of Dr. Gladman the committee decided to use its endeavors to secure from the Board of Supervisors an appropriation to build a county tuberculosis sanitarium, a part from the county almshouse. E. R. Redhead, President Paddock and the Rev. John Gerald York were named as a committee to present the matter to the Supervisors.

One enters, as in the west, into the cooling room, generally a high domed room with many galleries around, a marble floor and a fountain, and before going to a private room or, if the bath is to be done on the cheap, to a place on the big common sofas one exchanges dirty boots for slippers and changes for wooden clogs, wherein the novice walks like Agag, delicately, in fear of a fall, till he learns to imitate the speed of the bath men by abandoning all attempts to walk and executing a fast shuffle.

The outer hot room, at about the temperature of an English shampooing room, is a very secondary affair. One stays there for a little, still clothed in the primrose towel, reclining on a distant imitation of a bed, drinking coffee and smoking a cigarette, perhaps watching a couple of shampooers amusing themselves by a wrestling bout. The customer and the shampooer wear the same type of loin cloth, an elaborate check of red and yellow that may be seen any day in the streets on an apron worn by the Albanian sellers of chestnuts or sweetmeats.

If that cigarette is finished come into the inner room, heavy with damp heat, the real bath. The attendant pulls off the shoulder towel and opens the door, a heavy wooden affair, kept shut by a counterweight, whose banging is not the least characteristic noise in the bath. Inside is a large square domed room. Innumerable bulls-eyes in the dome admit the light, which the whitewashed walls reflect, making a light and airy effect. On the great square slab in the middle they have placed a towel and a pillow, and here one lies, leaving the clogs on the floor.

Round the room, screened from one another by dwarf walls, are a row of marble basins, and here may be seen all classes—such is the democracy of Islam—from the army officer to the day laborer, whose shaven head oddly suggests a tonsure. The poorer classes do not indulge in the luxury of massage. They come for a wash only and often bring their own soap for economy's sake. It is not uncommon to see two of them scrubbing one another by turns.

Presently, unbidden, the shampooer mounts the slab and squats beside his victim. Most of his work consists in kneading the flesh rather than the long, heavy strokes of an English masseur. But when the customer is turned on his face the masseur becomes more energetic. He plucks the skin on each side of the spine, walks up and down on the back and strenuously gathers up arms and legs into curious bone breaking knots regardless of the grunts of the stiff jointed west. A final super-Gordian knot and the clapping of his hands show that it is over.

The customer, as soon as he can collect limbs which seem to have been pulled clean off him, adjourns to one of the basins and is rubbed with a rough glove to take off the old skin. Then the man brings a battered metal bowl ("old bowl, old bath," is the Turkish proverb for "the old, old story") with soap and a lather wisp of "lyr" (Mocsa pain fiber, and scrubs conscientiously for some ten minutes, working with the abandon of a zealous housemaid on a floor, forgetful apparently that the object he is scrubbing is flesh and blood.

Finally he pours warm water from the bowl to wash away the last of the soap and, if the bath is a large and up to date one, conducts his well scrubbed victim to a cold douche.

Drying takes place in the outer hot room, sundry loin cloths and towels are wrapped about the body, a small towel makes a turban for the head and clean clogs are produced for the feet, which have been dried with great—sometimes inconveniently great—care.

A loud clapping of hands announces that the process is over, and the three or four Turks who seem always to be doing nothing zealously in the room crowd round to wish out good health.

THE TURKISH BATH

A Victim's Story of the Real Thing
In Its Native Land.

WELL MAULED AND SCRAPPED.

He Was Kneaded, Plucked, Turned Over and Walked Upon and Then Scrubbed as Though He Were a Kitchen Floor.

The tourist who wanders about Stamboul will from time to time come on domed buildings of all sizes which might be taken for mosques but that they seem to have no fountains and no minarets. From some place, such as the terrace of the mosque of Sultan Sulayman, where their roofs may be overlooked, it will be seen that the low domes are often of a peculiar salmon pink color and always covered with glass bulls-eyes. These are the real Turkish baths.

Quite apart from the ceremonial wash before prayer, Islam, which considers cleanliness not so much next to godliness as a part of godliness itself, ordains a periodical scrub all over. And the Turk, unlike the sudden west, never sits in hot water, but prefers a hot room, a tap and a basin as a minimum and a shampooer and a flesh glove if he can afford such luxuries.

One enters, as in the west, into the cooling room, generally a high domed room with many galleries around, a marble floor and a fountain, and before going to a private room or, if the bath is to be done on the cheap, to a place on the big common sofas one exchanges dirty boots for slippers and changes for wooden clogs, wherein the novice walks like Agag, delicately, in fear of a fall, till he learns to imitate the speed of the bath men by abandoning all attempts to walk and executing a fast shuffle.

NEW OFFICERS ELECTED

The annual meeting of the Oswego County Fruit Growers' Association was held on December 10. There was a large crowd in attendance and many handsome exhibits.

President Ira Pease, of Oswego Town, and Secretary D. D. Stone, of Scriba, called the meeting to order, and the first speaker was Professor F. C. Stewart, of the State Experimental Station, Geneva.

Professor Stewart spoke on fruit diseases, explaining them, how they developed and the methods of treating them. Mr. Anderson, of Demeter, was the only other speaker in the morning. J. H. Buckner, who was scheduled to come, having been detained in the western part of the State. Mr. Anderson, who had a fine exhibit at the meeting, spoke on bean growing.

The principal speaker in the afternoon was Professor Schoene, of Geneva. He talked about lime and sulphur sprays for fruit trees and told about the method of manufacturing them.

Officers for the coming year were elected as follows:

President, Ira Pease, Fruit Valley; first vice president, Dr. A. C. Taylor, Baldwinville; second vice president, P. M. Anderson, Demeter; Secretary-Treasurer, D. D. Stone, Scriba.

No Rest Day or Night

"I would lay awake for hours without any apparent cause, or dream terrible dreams which would bring on extreme spells of nervousness. After taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and Tonic for awhile I could sleep well, and the nervous spells have left me." MISS ALMA HUG, R. R. No. 4, Canal Dover, Ohio.

Without sleep the nervous system soon becomes a wreck, and the healthful activity of all the organs obstructed. Restful, body-building sleep accompanies the use of Dr. Miles' Nervine because it soothes the irritable nerves, and restores nervous energy. When taken a few days according to directions, the most restless sufferer will find sleep natural and healthful. Get a bottle from your druggist. Take it all according to directions, and if it does not benefit he will return your money.

The dog doctor was making out a bill for the month's expenses of a Japanese spaniel. The items were room rent, board, medical attendance and electric light.

"Electric light?" exclaimed his secretary. "What on earth does a dog need with electric light?"

"He doesn't need it at all," said the doctor, "but his owner has ordered it, and he has been supplied with two eight-candle power lights every evening he has been in the hospital. He is one of those spoiled pups who were put to bed in a light room in their infancy, and now he cannot sleep in the dark. We always have two or three of that kind on hand. They occupy a special ward where the lights burn all night long."—New York Sun.

A Handsome Woman

Every woman may not be handsome, but every woman should keep with care the good points nature has given her. No woman need have sallow skin, dull eye, blotchy complexion, who pays proper attention to her health. Where constipation, liver derangements, blood impurities and other irregularities exist, good complexion, bright eyes and sprightly movements cannot exist. Internal derangements reveal themselves sooner or later, on the surface. Headache, dark rings around the eyes, sallow skin, a constant tired feeling—mean that the liver and digestive organs are needing help and correction. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets give this necessary help. They act on nature's own way. They do not merely force the bowels but clear the liver and stomach to fulfill their proper function. So mild and gentle do they act that one hardly realizes that they have taken medicine. Chamberlain's Tablets can be relied upon to relieve biliousness, indigestion, constipation and dizziness. Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

Oswego, Dec. 13.—F. H. Brown of this city, County Sealer of Weights and Measures, submitted a report and complained that the salary paid ($1,000) out of which he paid his own expenses, was not sufficient. He assumed office in July and has expended $29.02 more than he has received in salary. He had visited ten towns, tested 181 sets of scales and condemned 80 of them. Of 216 measures tested twenty-one were condemned. He had also caused a number of weights to be replaced. The attending expenses of the position, he said, would run from $4 to $5 a day.

Mr. Niles presented a resolution asking for an increase of the salary of Charles Allsever, the index clerk in the County Clerk's office, from $720 to $960 per year. On motion of W. M. Barker the matter was made a special order for tomorrow.

A. S. Barker presented the report of the Equalization Committee. Over one day under the rules. The report shows a number of changes.

By Mr. Jackson: That the Volney-Palermo road be designated for improvement for the year 1912. The distance is about five miles. Adopted.

By Mr. Ouderkirk: Levying $1,104.31 on Granby to pay bridge bonds. Adopted.

A. S. Barker presented a report of Justice Fitzgerald, of Orwell. Referred.

Chairman Sweetland named as the special committee to investigate and report upon changes in the heating and ventilating system of the county court house, Messrs. Hamer, F. W. Gallagher, and G. A. Jackson. Adjourned.

Supervisor Hartnett, of Fulton, made an unsuccessful effort to defeat the report of the Committee on Equalization presented yesterday. The report takes $144,893 off of the towns and attaches it to the cities of Fulton and Oswego. Upon Oswego the Supervisors hung $49,239 and on Fulton $94,999.

The towns which received reductions were the following: Albion, $1,100; Amboy, $7,976; Boylston, $4,012; Constantia, $6,007; Granby, $8,016; Hannibal, $93; Hastings, $4,006; Mexico, $2,204; New Haven, $15,997; Orwell, $24,206; Oswego Town, $3,907; Palermo, $2,494; Parish, $5,993; Redfield, $12,019; Richland, $12,987; Sandy Creek, $3,996; Schroepel, $1,492; Scriba, $1,000; Volney, $1,996; West Monroe, $1,930; Williamstown, $9,568.

Mr. Hartnett's motion to defer action until Friday was defeated, Mr. W. M. Barker calling for the ayes and nays.

The vote was twenty-one nays to eight ayes.

By Mr. Niles: Levying $25 on Parish for Memorial day. Adopted.

By Mr. Pierce: Including in the Pulaski-Williamstown road through the town of Albany to include the

Mr. Gayer moved that it be made a special order for Friday. Adopted.

By Mr. Terry: That the State pay as in the first instance the $16,306 required for the extension of the Richland-Orwell road. Adopted.

The special orders relative to the salaries of the employees in the County Clerk's office was called up and the Board went into executive session.

After the executive session the question of an increase in salaries came up and all three propositions were laid on the table. Some of the members were in favor of an advance, but others said that if one received an increase all would expect recognition. Besides those in the clerk's office the County Sealer of Weights and Measures wants an increase, and E. B. Howard, County Highway Commissioner, wants an automobile.

Have the Charter Amended

The raising of the valuation of Fulton $94,999 by the Equalization Committee of the Board of Supervisors last week was a grossly unfair piece of business and will react upon the members who stood sponsor for it. It appears there was not a voice in Committee raised in protest of the injustice. Supervisor Fulton of this city having been lead to believe that if he objected a raise of $350,000 would be made. The committee was composed of one member

Commissioners to Hold Over

The very unsatisfactory plan of all Public Works Commissioners going out with the mayor whose term has expired, is being agitated a great deal of late, with the probable result that a charter amendment will provide for three commissioners to hold over one, two and three years so that with change of administration at least one old member will be retained.

This would seem a very desirable move unless the more desirable one yet, of single headed commissioners for the city government be provided.

MARRIED

Mr. Charles Roden of Jordan and Miss Florence Guernsey of this city were united in marriage on Monday by the Rev. F. A. Miller at the parsonage of the State street Methodist church.

Saturday evening, December 10, at the home of Dexter Worden, 212 Ulster street, Mr. Pearl Inman and Miss Mabel Closs, both of Fulton, were united in marriage by Rev. C. L. Peck. The ceremony was witnessed by a small circle of friends and the couple was attended by Mr. Roy James and Miss Sarah Casselman.

Mr. Harry Scudder of this city and Miss Marion Hale of Volney, formerly a teacher in Minetto, were united in marriage on Monday evening, December 6, at the Methodist parsonage in Minetto by the Rev. Mr. Miller. The bride, who is one of Volney's brightest and most popular young ladies was attended by Miss Fern Scudder as bridesmaid; the best man was Mr. George Baker. After a brief bridal trip Mr. and Mrs. Scudder will make their home with Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Scudder in Oneida street, the two brothers being engaged in the grocery business in that street.

Mr. F. A. Gage has been most notoriously generous at this Xmas time, last week having presented the pastor of all churches in the city with a barrel of flour, divided into one eighth barrel sacks; to be given the needy in their congregations. The pastors are deeply appreciative of the kindly deed and the beneficiaries will be as much so.

The Baraca Bible Class of the Baptist church last week elected officers as follows for the ensuing year: President, D. J. Read; vice president, S. W. Merrill; secretary, J. A. Castor; treasurer, W. H. Merriam; teacher, the Rev. J. G. York. Rev. G. W. Wellburn spoke before the class in most entertaining and instructive manner upon the present crisis in British politics.

Dr. and Mrs. I. C. Curtis write of sunshine and roses abound, while the Doctor sits in his shirt sleeves on his veranda each day and watches the sun ripen his oranges and grape fruit. This is alright for the Doctor and wife but its rubbing it in for we poor mortals who must wade through snow drifts each day and contemplate the only fruit the sunshine ripens here at present, the ice cycle.

Christmas at the First Methodist church next Sunday will be observed with a special musical program, a Christmas sermon by the pastor at 10:30 a. m., entitled, "Heaven and Earth Summed up in Bethlehem's Cradle," a Christmas talk before the Brotherhood Class at noon, a Christmas service for the young people at 6 p. m. led by Mrs. C. The operation was a success and the child will be able to return to her home in a few days unless some unforeseen complication should arise.

A CHRISTMAS AT CAPE HORN.

ONCE I had a shipmate who celebrated the most grateful Christmas of his life at the Horn.

It was on the Mary Ann, in December, 1897. She was a deep cut steel clipper, but she was a four masted bark, and four masted barks are all ugly in heavy seas. The best sea boat about will plunge at Cape Horn, but four masted barks are all the time under water. Sometimes they are swamped, altogether and float waterlogged around the Horn. Then the current pushes them south to perish in the ice jam.

Some sailors can be likened to the four masted barks. They are the sailors who have been too long away from home. All sailors plunge liberally into shore life, but the "too long away from home" fellows are, as a rule, swamped in shore life's breakers.

One of my mates on the Mary Ann was Bob Jones, a typical "too long away from home" unfortunate. But Bob still had something dear to his heart. He had started on more than one trip around the world with the set determination that the end of the voyage should see him rejoin his own loved ones at home.

But on pay day at the end of his trip his good resolutions had been broken. It had often gone so, and Bob was hiding self despair under the grim surface of a man hating man.

Bob and I, with twelve other Yankees, Dutchmen and Swedes, were on the starboard watch under Chief Mate, Dickson, of the Mary Ann. When we went below on Christmas eve the sea was running high. Sleet and hail came down in the squalls. The western gale had rimmed our sails down to the lower topsails.

We had hardly fallen asleep when we heard the man at the wheel strike the bell. Before the signal for "All hands on deck" was answered forward Bob and I were out of our bunks and had our sea boots on.

"What's up now?" growled Bob, and he got his answer from Jimmy, the deck boy, who came rushing in with preliminary warning.

"Rise, rise, rise, decceral V"

ship for icebergs on the leeward to rise, rise, rise!"

The watch on deck was already tugging the fore staysail to head the vessel off the wind. She was running easy when we came on deck, and the storm sparker was hauled out to bring the vessel to the wind on the other tack.

Bob was sent forward to furl the fore staysail. The rest of us went to the braces and pulled the yards in to starboard. Then came the ugliest part of the job. Slowly the Mary Ann turned to face her foe again. But before she could head her bow against the mighty seas they broke over her from stem to stern.

Bob came aft to the staysail to join us just as we all jumped out of the way, for a big breaker came chundering over the weather rail.

The breaker caught Bob at the fore backstay. He jumped up and put his arm through the coils of the fore sheet, hanging in straps in the royal backstay.

The straps were rotten, and Bob and the coil sheet rope dropped and disappeared in the boiling deck waters.

The waters surged to leeward and carried a dark object with them. The skipper threw a life buoy from the poop.

"Poor Bob!" said everybody to himself. It was all we could do for him. Bob was gone, and there seemed to be no help for it.

We had the Mary Ann snug at last. Our watch had still an hour more to go, not long enough to make it worth while to crawl into our bunks, and we huddled our pipes, lay down on our chests and discussed poor Bob.

Bill, who was Bob's own chum, went to Bob's bunk and overhauled the things.

"It is enough to make anybody rippling mad to think of a rotten old strap, chucking a poor fellow overboard," caused Bill. "Christmas night too. Say, boys, when we auction this stuff off we've got to show Bob up handsome to his friends."

It must be explained that when sailors die at sea their belongings are sold at auction to the crew. This custom serves a double purpose. It is easier to ship money halfway around the globe than to insure the safe delivery of an old wooden chest. A good sum of money is also more welcome to most heirs than a chestful of tarred bags. Besides, the sea auctions give the shipmates of the dead an opportunity to "raise his reputation" by adding generously to his account.

Everybody wanted to fill the Christmas stockings of poor Bob's folks. The chief mate, Dickson, good naturedly consented that the auction should be held then and there and came to the foremast with pencil and paper to record the sales as fast as they were made.

"Here you are, boys—here you are! Get your money ready. The greatest Cape Horn sale ever held will now start," rasped the old chief. "First article is a valuable straw pillow. He member what Bill Shakespeare says, 'Unseen rests the head that hasn't got a pillow.' What am I bid? Two dollars? Thank you! Three—four—five—six—six I have. Cape Horn prices, gentlemen. Eight—ten—ten—are you all done? Tom, you can have it for $10. You may get a better one in San Francisco for 50 cents, but you can't duplicate it for $50 within a thousand miles of this place.

"Next article is a handsome stand-up linen collar. It has only been worn by poor Bob in Liverpool and can be washed absolutely clean for the small price of 5 cents. It is the only article of its kind that has ever been for sale at Cape Horn. What am I bid—a dollar—two, two-fifty, three-fifty, four—four—are you all done? Sold to Dick for $4. Dick is a sport now. Wait a minute; there is a button in the back of the collar. You will have to buy the button separately, Dick."

And so each worn and patched garment of poor Bob was sold at "Cape Horn prices." Bob's shipmates took care that none of them contributed less than a month's wages to Bob's final pay day.

The mate at last put his hand to the bottom of Bob's chest, and from a corner he brought up a bundle of papers wrapped in an old piece of canvas tied together with yellow silken cigar bands. The mate held the bundle thoughtfully in his hand. He hesitated to trespass.

"Open it up!" shouted the men in chorus.

"Item! Well, we will see what is in it anyway," asserted the mate. When the canvas cover was opened a score of letters in soiled and torn envelopes dropped out.

"I see no harm in letting you fellows get a little home sentiment out of these old letters," said the mate, "but you must not keep them. They must be forwarded to Bob's friends. You boys can bid for the privilege of reading the letters."

Dick for $9 bought the right to first pick. He took the best preserved envelope and its inclosure and went away to read the letter.

The sale continued, letter after letter fetching a neat sum. Half the letters were sold when Dick came from his corner and interrupted the sale. He looked troubled and shook his head in our faces.

"Boys, this letter is from the girl," said he. "She's a dandy. Bob was no good. He didn't go home when he was paid off in Liverpool; he didn't go home from New York; he didn't go home from San Francisco when he could have made the trip in a day. The girl is waiting yet."

The mate, who had been intently reading one of the letters, here interrupted.

"Bob's mother is getting old, and she is poor. She does not ask for money, however. All she wants is her boy. He will never return to her now. Poor Bob's mother! Poor Bob!"

At four bells the lookout gave us his "All's well! Side lights burning bright." Suddenly he began to beat the forward bell like mad.

The lookout was shouting and waving his arms from the forecastle head, where he stood clinging to the rail. When we reached the fore part of the house the lookout attracted our attention to a dark object leaning up against the starboard lighthouse.

It was Bob Jones.

We carried him into the forecastle. The mate and the whisky bottle were brought forward, and Bob slowly came to his senses.

"I was slambanged something fearful, boys," drawled Bob. "That breaker caught me right, and the blamed strap broke. Then over she rolled to leeward."

"And I saw you go over the side," interrupted Dick.

"Not I. It may have been the sheet off," continued Bob. "I was washed away up under the forecastle head. I guess I went clean off in a faint after I had crawled to a dry place. When I woke up I made for the forecastle, but I couldn't make it. I dropped right off again at the lighthouse."

When Bob had been bandaged up and given a warm breakfast he was the old Bob once more. The boys poked lots of fun at him when they returned his things to him.

"Hold on, boys; let us make a bargain with Bob," the imperative Dick broke in. "Here is my Bible. If Bob will swear to go home to his mother and the girl from San Francisco he can take the auction money along as a Christmas present."

"That's right! Come on, Bob. Swear, man, swear!"

"I do, so help me, God, and a merry Christmas to you all, boys!" sobbed Bob. "I will go home, boys—I will! And be did.—Philadelphia Ledger."

A VALUABLE STRAW PILLOW.

"Item! Well, we will see what is in it anyway," asserted the mate. When the canvas cover was opened a score of letters in soiled and torn envelopes dropped out.

Eight—ten—ten—are you all done? Tom, you can have it for $10. You may get a better one in San Francisco for 50 cents, but you can't duplicate it for $50 within a thousand miles of this place.

"Next article is a handsome stand-up linen collar. It has only been worn by poor Bob in Liverpool and can be washed absolutely clean for the small price of 5 cents. It is the only article of its kind that has ever been for sale at Cape Horn. What am I bid—a dollar—two, two-fifty, three-fifty, four—four—are you all done? Sold to Dick for $4. Dick is a sport now. Wait a minute; there is a button in the back of the collar. You will have to buy the button separately, Dick."

And so each worn and patched garment of poor Bob was sold at "Cape Horn prices." Bob's shipmates took care that none of them contributed less than a month's wages to Bob's final pay day.

The mate at last put his hand to the bottom of Bob's chest, and from a corner he brought up a bundle of papers wrapped in an old piece of canvas tied together with yellow silken cigar bands. The mate held the bundle thoughtfully in his hand. He hesitated to trespass.

"Open it up!" shouted the men in chorus.

"Item! Well, we will see what is in it anyway," asserted the mate. When the canvas cover was opened a score of letters in soiled and torn envelopes dropped out.

"I see no harm in letting you fellows get a little home sentiment out of these old letters," said the mate, "but you must not keep them. They must be forwarded to Bob's friends. You boys can bid for the privilege of reading the letters."

Dick for $9 bought the right to first pick. He took the best preserved envelope and its inclosure and went away to read the letter.

The sale continued, letter after letter fetching a neat sum. Half the letters were sold when Dick came from his corner and interrupted the sale. He looked troubled and shook his head in our faces.

"Boys, this letter is from the girl," said he. "She's a dandy. Bob was no good. He didn't go home when he was paid off in Liverpool; he didn't go home from New York; he didn't go home from San Francisco when he could have made the trip in a day. The girl is waiting yet."

The mate, who had been intently reading one of the letters, here interrupted.

"Bob's mother is getting old, and she is poor. She does not ask for money, however. All she wants is her boy. He will never return to her now. Poor Bob's mother! Poor Bob!"

At four bells the lookout gave us his "All's well! Side lights burning bright." Suddenly he began to beat the forward bell like mad.

The lookout was shouting and waving his arms from the forecastle head, where he stood clinging to the rail. When we reached the fore part of the house the lookout attracted our attention to a dark object leaning up against the starboard lighthouse.

It was Bob Jones.

We carried him into the forecastle. The mate and the whisky bottle were brought forward, and Bob slowly came to his senses.

"I was slambanged something fearful, boys," drawled Bob. "That breaker caught me right, and the blamed strap broke. Then over she rolled to leeward."

"And I saw you go over the side," interrupted Dick.

"Not I. It may have been the sheet off," continued Bob. "I was washed away up under the forecastle head. I guess I went clean off in a faint after I had crawled to a dry place. When I woke up I made for the forecastle, but I couldn't make it. I dropped right off again at the lighthouse."

When Bob had been bandaged up and given a warm breakfast he was the old Bob once more. The boys poked lots of fun at him when they returned his things to him.

"Hold on, boys; let us make a bargain with Bob," the imperative Dick broke in. "Here is my Bible. If Bob will swear to go home to his mother and the girl from San Francisco he can take the auction money along as a Christmas present."

"That's right! Come on, Bob. Swear, man, swear!"

"I do, so help me, God, and a merry Christmas to you all, boys!" sobbed Bob. "I will go home, boys—I will! And be did.—Philadelphia Ledger."

"Here you are, boys—here you are! Get your money ready. The greatest Cape Horn sale ever held will now start," rasped the old chief. "First article is a valuable straw pillow. He member what Bill Shakespeare says, 'Unseen rests the head that hasn't got a pillow.' What am I bid? Two dollars? Thank you! Three—four—five—six—six I have. Cape Horn prices, gentlemen. Eight—ten—ten—are you all done? Tom, you can have it for $10. You may get a better one in San Francisco for 50 cents, but you can't duplicate it for $50 within a thousand miles of this place.

An Offering to the Rich.

A Christmas Story
By Alice Louise Lee.

Copyright, 1905 by Alice Louise Lee.

OWEN HARD sat in room 30 of the Hard block. He called the place his office and himself a real estate agent, but it was no secret in the city that the only real estate he had time to attend to was his own and that his callers were people who came to ask favors, not to leave fees.

It was the afternoon before Christmas, and the dull December sun shone in at the window and fell on Hard stretched out in a big leather padded armchair beside the table.

He was a man nearing middle life. His dark hair was plentifully streaked with gray, while his forehead had fallen into heavy lines, which gave his face when in repose an expression of ill nature that belied a disposition singularly generous and open. His hands were crowded into his pockets. "It's

HE STILL GAZED OUT OF THE WINDOW, where they have been for the greater part of the week," he said grimly to Yemans, a friend and a neighboring lawyer, who sat on the table and swung one foot.

Yemans laughed. "A fellow has to pay dearly these days, Hard, for being rich. Still, I shouldn't object to paying the price myself."

An odd expression crossed Hard's face. He drew himself up and, clasping his hands behind his head, looked fixedly out of the window.

"Cheer up, old man," said Yemans still laughing. "Your money brings you a sort of fame. I don't believe there has been a fair charity show, festival, pauper's death, failure or any other public event in this town for years but what Owen S. Hard has been called on to pull some one out of something out of a hole, and he always does it, too," added Yemans heartily.

Hard did not smile. He still gazed out of the window. "Would you believe, Yemans, that for ten years I have never— He suddenly checked his speech and then spoke as though to himself. "If I were a society man, probably I'd receive soft pillows and such trash, but—"

Yemans started. "What on earth are you driving at?"

"Nothing, nothing," exclaimed Hard impatiently. "I'm only stupidly thinking aloud."

He shook himself, arose and began pacing the floor with his arms folded behind him. Yemans whistled a bit and slid off the table. He yawned and picked up his hat. "I say, here's a pup-

It's hard luck to be rich, but it's always been Hard's luck. There's a merry Christmas to you, old fellow. And Yemans left, slamming the door behind him.

Hard dropped into his big chair again and ran his fingers through his heavy hair. In the hall were merry calls, the shutting of office doors and the general stir of an early closing up of business to which the owner of the block paid no attention. He leaned his elbow on the table and thought, while his forehead fell into its heaviest lines.

Presently there was a stir outside his door, followed by a faint rap. "Come," he shouted, but evidently the noise drowned his voice. The knock was repeated. He arose and rather ungraciously opened the door.

Before him stood a queer combination. It did not take up much room either in height or breadth. Had it been twice as tall his eyes could have looked over it at Yemans just stepping into the elevator. Yemans was laughing and thrusting his hands significantly into his pockets. The elevator boy was grinning. The dentist, looking his best, was chuckling and winking at a doctor ringing for the ascending elevator.

Then Hard, half weary, half affable and wholly amused, said, "Come in." The combination entered. It consisted of a morsel of a boy, pulling after him a small red express wagon which was filled to overflowing with something carefully covered with an old bedgilt. At the tail of the cart were two upright sticks, from which was strapped a piece of thin black cloth pinned to the bedgilt halfway down the cart.

Hard surveyed the procession as it crossed the floor. "He is got up regardless of his feelings for the purpose of appealing to mine," was his thought as his hand involuntarily wandered to his pocket.

The boy pulled the rattling express cart across the soft rug to the desk and laid the tongue down carefully. "I'm Robert Allison Broxley," he announced, working his hat loose from his head and bowing gravely.

Hard returned the bow and followed in the wake of the cart, feeling rather superfluous as a host. "I am glad to meet you, Robert Allison Broxley," he said solemnly. "I am Owen S. Hard."

The child regarded him steadily with great black eyes set in dark rings which extended low on his cheeks. The face ought to have been the face of a mere baby had not responsibility claimed its owner early and made of him a premature man.

"I knew who you was," Robert Allison Broxley said calmly. His face looked troubled, and Hard detected a suspicion of tears around the long black lashes and a quiver in the chin for which he could not account. Robert's next words, however, confirmed him in the idea which had led his hand to his pocket.

"You are rich, ain't you?" the little chap asked, laying hold of the black cloth at the tail of the cart. He asked in a queer voice which seemed to be in denial.

"Most people take it for granted that I am," answered Hard dryly.

Robert did not understand the hidden meaning. His face fell, and he struggled with some emotion which caused him to draw his coat sleeve across his eyes. "Then nobody doesn't give you nothing for a present, does they?" he asked.

Hard looked at the boy curiously and said what he had interrupted him self in saying to Yemans a few months before: "No, Robert; no one has made me a present in ten years."

"I'm sorry for you," muttered Robert and his hand again sought the black cloth. He raised one corner and peered under. The sight evidently made him still more unwilling to uncover the cart. "I'm sorry for you," he repeated, holding down the corner of the cloth.

"Won't you give a sack of flour or clothes or broth or fruit or shoes or nothing tomorrow from nobody?" anxiously.

"No, Robert," said Hard solemnly. "Probably no one will give me a single gift."

"You must have an awful bad time," sighed Robert.

"Well, I don't have a very good time always on Christmas day," agreed Hard. "Do you?"

The child brightened. "Oh, yes, 'cause everybody is so good and gives us lots and lots of things."

"I never have," hazarded Hard, "and I am somebody."

Robert looked up, his eyes growing wider. "Why, you know you've been the goodest of all. That's why— He glanced at the cart and checked him self. "You give my papa a fun'ral, a very nice fun'ral, too," cheerfully, "and you sent us a hen for tomorrow. There's better pickin' on a rooster, you know, but the hen is very nice and fat, most as big as that rooster you sent on Thanksgiving day. Hain't you no hens left for yourself?" anxiously.

"Funerals, hens," repeated Hard musingly. He had given so many funerals and hens on request that one more or less made no impression on him. "I give it up, little man. You have the better of me. You seem to know more of what I do than I remember myself, so we will change the subject. What have you there?" pointing to the cart.

Robert hesitated and winked fast. "I brought something—that is, I got something to give you a lift."

"A lift?" repeated Hard, mystified.

Robert nodded and removed the black cloth gingerly, saying apologetically at the same time: "You see, you darsent let the sun on to their eyes ever," and revealed to Hard's astonished gaze two tiny dimpled faces crowned with yellow silky hair. Two heads sleepily moved and two pairs of deep blue eyes half opened.

"Twins!" ejaculated Hard. He turned over the children and projected a finger at the one nearest him. The baby closed her soft fingers around it and looked up with an engaging display of smiles and dimples.

"Two twins," corrected Robert. "That's her," pointing to the one clinging to Hard, "and this is him. Yours is half."

At this point Robert gave a decided sniff and reached for his old hat. Out of the crown he drew an unheeded rag and applied the same to his nose.

"Mine? Half of what?" asked the astonished Hard.

"Half of these," Robert leaned over the twins, and his voice choked. "You may have him," touching the baby boy, "or her," touching the baby girl, "but I guess meebey you better take him and leave me her 'less you want her awful bad. It's a lift to you."

"Oh, I see—a gift!" and Hard sat down wearily beside his gift. There was a queer expression about his eyes. He leaned over and, resting his elbow on his knees and his head in his hand was silent for a moment. "Her" carried his finger to her mouth and began to suck it with apparent relish and many little gurglings.

"What would your mother say if I kept half the twins?" he asked abruptly.

"Of course she'd meebey be sorry, but they don't belong to her. They're mine."

"Not hers?" echoed Hard.

"None," smothering a sob. "They're every bit of 'em mine. Mamma never had 'em 'cause first they was papa's, and just before you give him a fun'ral he handed 'em over to me. They're all I got that I can give away," he added in explanation.

"Thank you, Robert, for the gift," Hard's tone was muffled. "And I think you're the only one in this city who is sorry enough for me tonight to make me a present—such a rare and beautiful present too. But," looking intently at the little caretaker, "I'd rather have this baby," and he indicated the girl.

Robert's breast heaved, but he set his thin lips together unchildishly as he bent over the cart. He carefully unwedged the little creature and raised her with all his slim strength to Hard's arm.

The child was not at all afraid. She looked up with her great round eyes and thrust her baby fingers into the thick hair brought within her reach, laughing at the result.

"What is her name?" asked Hard gently.

"We're so busy over to our house, me and mamma, that we hain't got round to namin' 'em yet. But," jestingly, "I 'spose you'll be a-namin' her now." Then, after a slight pause, came the suggestion, "I'd 'smost called her Ruth."

Robert, with shaking hands, began to arrange the bedgilt over the solitary baby in the cart. He had recourse frequently to the crown of the derby and the sleeve of his coat. Hard sat silently watching him adjust the black sun cover, although the sun had set and the short winter day was nearly ended. He watched until the boy trembled forth a dutiful and brave "Merry Christmas" and had drawn the express cart to the door. Then he smiled.

"Robert," he called, "come back a moment!"

Robert obeyed, with his eyes fixed longingly on the yellow head lying against the black sleeve.

"See here, Robert," began Hard, "you are leaving me in a bad fix. I don't know what this youngster eats or wears or drinks or anything else. I can't take care of her."

Robert smiled through his tears. "Why, seems as if you're big enough to know, ain't you?" he asked pityingly.

"Yes, I'm big enough, but I've never been taught, and I'm sure my house-keeper is just as ignorant as I am. Do you take care of these babies?"

"Oh, yes, most all the time, 'cause mamma don't have no time much. She sews."

"All right, then, I'll make a bargain with you. You take care of her, and I'll pay you for it. I'll find out how much it's worth in the baby market. How does that strike you?" Hard's mouth was grave, but his eyes kept smiling in a way which always made his plain face attractive.

Robert became instantly animated. "I'll do it anyway," he cried eagerly, laying hold of the tot.

Hard released her. "Hold on, though, my man," he said, getting his topcoat and hat. "I'm going home with you. I'm afraid your mother is rash enough to believe she has as great a claim on those twins as you have"—his eyes were still smiling—"and I want to look into the matter myself."

His eyes smiled all through his interview with Mrs. Broxley and for several days after. They still wore their amused, good natured expression when one morning Robert Allison Broxley stopped before the office door trundling a neat perambulator and dressed in a way which made him unrecognizable to Yemans, looking his door opposite.

"Hello, there, kid!" Hard heard Yemans call. "Are those your babies?"

"They were both mine before Christmas," explained a small voice eagerly, "but I give one to Mr. Hard, and her name is Ruth now." Then, proudly surveying his trim outfit, he explained further to the dazed Yemans: "Ruth's his now, only he don't take her away. He hires me to take care of her 'cause he can't keep it straight what to feed her. Ain't that queer? And him such a big man!"

PROHIBITIONISTS ALARMED

The semi-annual meeting of the Prohibitionist State Committee is in session in Syracuse as we go to press. The opinion has been expressed by State Chairman Pitts of Oswego that unless the Prohibitionists organize on a systematic and uniform basis, the Socialists will win and absorb the very support the Prohibitionists must have, forcing the two old parties into one party and completely putting the Prohibition party out of existence. A new constitution will come up at the meeting designed to make a better organization and push forward the Prohibition movement.

At the meeting of the Oswego County Committee, held in Oswego last Thursday, the following officers were elected: George D. Harger, State Committeeman; George W. Rogers, Chairman; Raymond Cooper, Vice-Chairman, and E. B. Pitts, Secretary and Treasurer.

MARVELOUS DISCOVERIES

mark the wonderful progress of the age. Air flights on heavy machines, telegrams without wires, terrible war inventions to kill men, and that wonder of wonders, Dr. King's New Discovery—to save life when threatened by coughs, colds, a gripe, asthma, croup, bronchitis, hemorrhages, hay fever and whooping cough or lung trouble. For all bronchial affections it has no equal. It relieves instantly. Its the surest cure. James M. Black of Asheville, N. C., R. R. No. 4, writes it cured him of an obstinate cough after all other remedies failed. 50c. and $1.00. A trial bottle free. Guaranteed by the Red Cross Pharmacy.

A Paraphrase.

"So you have become converted to prohibition?"
"No," answered Colonel Stilwell of Kentucky. "I am not exactly a prohibitionist, but I am a firm believer in the theory that a soft drink turneth away headaches."—Washington Star.

BOARD OF SUPERVISORS

Oswego, Dec. 19.—At the session of the Board of Supervisors held to-night the question of quarterly instead of annual sessions of the Board was brought up by Chairman Sweetland and discussed. The chairman declared that the question was an important one especially in the interests of the merchants of Oswego city. He said that under such an arrangement merchants would receive cash for their goods every ninety days instead of waiting for a year.

He suggested that if such a plan was put into effect the Miscellaneous committee could meet three or four days before the date of the quarterly session and audit the accounts for that approval by the Board. The chairman said the plan would work out nicely and would be a great benefit to the business people and would also shorten the winter session.

W. M. Barker then brought up the question of fixing the salary of the next sheriff. He said the next sheriff will be elected before the Board of Supervisors meets again next year and he thought the salary should be fixed before the nominations are made and the candidates elected.

Mr. Rounds presented a resolution which was passed without any comment, giving the chairmen of the various standing committees authority to summon witnesses before them and also to call for books and papers.

Mr. Ouderkerk's resolution made a special order, fixing the salaries of election officers in the towns, went through by a vote of 23 to 7. By its terms inspectors of election in the various towns will receive a uniform compensation. For all days of registration inspectors of election will receive $3 per day. On election day they will receive $6 and poll clerks $5 and ballot clerks $4. Hereafter there will be no compensation for more than one day on the day of the election.

Mr. Fuller presented a resolution that the County Treasurer be directed to pay burial orders of indigent soldiers to their wives, when the same have been properly certified to by the Supervisor in whose district they were granted and the commander of the post of the G. A. R. to which the persons were attached. He moved that it be made a special order for Thursday, explaining that those interested wanted to appear before the Board and urge reasons why the resolution should prevail.

Mr. Hydon amended that the resolution lie on the table. Lost. The original resolution was then adopted. Chairman Sweetland named as special committees the following: To look after the county's interest in the proposed new bridge over the Oswego river at Broadway in the city of Fulton—Hartnett, Jackson and Thompson.

Special committees to represent the Board at the State Conference on Taxation to be held in Utica January 12th and 13th—W. M. Barker, Crimmins and Vincent. Adjourned.

Oswego, Dec. 20.—The Board of Supervisors met at 11:30 o'clock this forenoon and adopted a resolution authorizing the erection of a tuberculosis hospital at a cost of not more than $10,000 including the site, the hospital to contain accommodation for from 16 to 20 patients. The resolution was adopted unanimously.

Supervisors Hamper, Hydon, A. S. Barker and Rounds spoke of the importance of going slow in the selection of a site and finally Supervisor Terry moved that the present tuberculosis committee carefully investigate the question of sites and report at a special meeting of the Board of Supervisors to be held the second Tuesday in April.

A meeting of the Board is to be held on this date for the purpose of re-districting the county into five new school commissioner districts. The Board will meet with the present three school commissioners. The re-districting is made necessary because of the new law applying to school commissioners.

When the tuberculosis matter was under discussion Supervisor Rounds stated that the officials having the matter in hand advocated the location of the hospital near the thickly populated section of the county.

Supervisor Rowe introduced a resolution fixing the tax on dogs in Volney at $1, $2, $3 and $4.

Oswego, Dec. 21.—The Board of Supervisors met this forenoon and a resolution introduced by Supervisor Commerford of Oswego, providing for sessions of the board in March, June and September was made a special order for next Thursday.

Supervisor W. M. Barker offered the special order resolution and urged that if any change was made that the session be held monthly when the items in the bills were familiar to the officials who ordered them. Supervisor Terry thought a change would be expensive to the taxpayers as money would have to be borrowed from the banks during the year.

Supervisor Fuller presented the report of the committee to prepare lists of grand jurors.

Supervisor Hartnett moved that the report of the committee be taken from the table and adopted.

Supervisor Rounds presented the report of the special committee to investigate the advisability of sending non-support prisoners to the Onondaga county penitentiary. The committee opposed the plan for many reasons, one of which was that the records showed an average of only four persons confined in the Oswego County Jail charged with non-support. The report showed that during the past four years the expense of maintaining such prisoners over the cost in Oswego jail would have been $394.68.

Supervisor A. S. Barker moved the appointment of a special committee of three to investigate assessments and equalization in Oswego County. A similar committee served last year. Supervisor Hartnett and Rounds questioned the legality of such a committee.

Supervisor Hartnett said the law provided for this appointment of two citizens of a county and the third from the judicial district. Considerable discussion relative to the work of the committee last year followed during which Supervisor A. S. Barker raised a point of order which prevented a further discussion of the resolution by Supervisor Hartnett and during which he caused a laugh by saying if this committee increased the assessments it would save the equalization committee from doing so.

An amendment by Supervisor Hartnett that action be deferred was lost by a vote of 12 to 17.

The A. S. Barker resolution providing for the appointment of a special committee was then adopted by a vote of 18 to 12.

Supervisor Niles moved that the chair appoint a committee of three to arrange for the annual outing of the Board to be held next summer.

Charles A. Lux of the Beebe syndicate was present and urged co-operation on the part of the Board in making it possible to extend the trolley road from Fulton to Oswego.

ALL CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES FILED

Albany, Dec. 25.—The Association to Prevent Corrupt Practices at Elections makes public the following supplemental report, with regard to its work in examining statements of political expenditures filed with the Secretary of State.

"All county committee statements for both parties are now filed with the exception of Republican, Tioga, and Democratic, Suffolk. The expenditures by county committees not set forth on last published report are as follows: Republican, Wayne, $2,240.02; Democratic, Fulton-Hamilton, an additional statement shows the expenditure of $2,400, which added to $728 already reported, makes a total of $3,128; Montgomery, $4,370; Orleans, $1,572.96; Putnam, $1,680.25; and Tioga, $2,375.

"From an examination of the county committee reports for both parties, it has been ascertained that for the Republican party, 1,730 statements have been filed; for the Democratic party, 1,274. For the Democratic party there should be 2,104; the number actually filed is 998. Number yet to be filed; Republican 506. Democratic 1,106.

"The number of facsimile statements on file this year is very small. One of the most interesting is the following, filed by Charles B. Hall, representing the Democratic party in the town of Rushford, Allegany county. In accounting for an expenditure of $20, he says:

"Will gladly say it was spent to buy votes with, as you will see by the Democratic gain. Out of 278 votes cast, there is only about 50 straight Democratic; we made a gain of 67 for Governor and member of Assembly. Also using my own rigs, three different days, delivering printed matter and lecturing. This is the result of the $20."

"After the treasurer of one of the Republican committees in one of the rural counties had been notified that his statements must be corrected, he sent to the office of the Secretary of State, a supplemental statement accompanied by a letter which read as follows:

"Wish you would file this with my statement; they seem to think I must have been buying votes with this amount, but if the Association would look at the returns from this county they ought to be convinced to the contrary."

"The amendment of last year providing that certain candidates should file their statements with county clerks, boards of election or city and town clerks, as the case may be, rather than with the Secretary of State, has evidently created a great deal of confusion. Eleven of the county clerks throughout the State neglected to file duplicates of the statements filed with them, at the office of the Secretary of State. These county clerks were requested by the Association to comply with the law, and as a result, duplicates are being filed. In addition, about 100 candidates were notified of their failure to file statements as required, and statements are being received from such candidates in every mail. This is a great improvement over the condition existing last year, when of a total of about 4,000 candidates required to file, not more than 25 per cent. had complied with the law, on the last day for filing.

"No judicial proceedings against either candidates or committees have been instituted by the Association up to this time. This year, letters are accomplishing the purposes for which proceedings were instituted in the past, though it is the Association's intention to begin proceedings against persons or committees failing to comply with requests to file supplemental statements, where the same are found to be necessary. Many persons acting for political committees, and candidates in person, write to the Association, congratulating its officers upon the good results shown by the statements filed, signifying their approval of the work being done and offering any assistance within their power.

"Within the past two weeks, detailed information in regard to the working of the corrupt practices acts has been sought by a group of prominent men in one of our largest States the object being to have enacted by the legislature of that State a similar law."

"I am a pagan" Emma Goldman announced. We feared it was worse than that.

BEEBE SYNDICATE BRANCHING OUT

President C. D. Beebe of the Rochester, Syracuse & Eastern Railroad, the Syracuse, Lake Shore & Northern Railroad, the Auburn & Syracuse Electric Railroad and associated lines, has given his official confirmation to the report of the purchase of the Buffalo, Lockport & Rochester Electric Railway by the Beebe Electric Railway Syndicate.

President Beebe stated that the road had not been acquired by the Rochester, Syracuse & Eastern Railroad, as reported, but by the so-called Beebe Syndicate and that it would be operated independently of the R. S. & E. The relations between the two roads from an operating and traffic standpoint, however, will naturally be close.

Although the ownership of the Buffalo, Lockport & Rochester has passed to the hands of the Beebe Syndicate, the actual management and operation of the road has not as yet changed and probably will not until numerous details essential to the transfer have been dismissed. Until that time J. M. Campbell of Toronto, Canada, who as receiver, has managed the road for more than a year, will continue to direct the operation of the property.

The terms of the purchase have not as yet been made public although it is reported that the transfer will result in a material shrinkage in the indebtedness and capitalization of the Lockport road so that it can be put upon a sound financial basis and thus be able to promptly resume payments of interest charged upon its bonds.

UNITED STATES POST OFFICE

By direction of the Post Office Department, the attention of patrons of this office is invited to the advantages of providing facilities for the receipt of their mail by erecting conveniently accessible boxes or cutting suitable slots in their doors. Such action would enable the postmaster to give a prompter and better delivery service with the means at his disposal, since the carriers can cover much more territory in less time if not compelled to wait for an answer to their ring. Private receptacles for mail are also a great convenience to the householder, obviating the necessity of responding to the carrier's call at inconvenient moments and permitting the safe delivery of mail in the absence of members of the household. They also prevent the necessity of proceeding on his route without delivering mail because of failure to answer his ring within a reasonable time, and enable him to make deliveries to patrons living on or near the end of the route at an earlier hour.

It has been shown by actual experience that the benefits derived by patrons of city delivery from the use of such receptacles far outweigh the small expense involved. As this office is interested in furnishing the best possible service at the least expense, your compliance with the foregoing suggestions will be much appreciated.

William E. Hughes
Postmaster.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1910.

The Times wishes its readers a very happy New Year, filled with peace, plenty and prosperity. It also extends the hope that the new year about to be born may bring an abundance of all desirable to our city and to its residents.

The capital of the United States is, as is usual during the Congressional session, the arena of conventions, or the stage from which great enterprises are launched. What could be grander than the proposed national park to extend from Baltimore to Washington and to include two hundred thousand acres of forest, hill and dale? It is estimated that the cost will be six millions of dollars. The two cities are practically forty miles apart but they are connected by two steam roads, two electric roads and by a boulevard almost completed, over which automobiles pass in less than an hour.

Andrew Carnegie, whose benefactions amount now to $180,000,000 has just added a donation of $10,000,000 for the promotion of peace throughout the world. The nations will continue to build battleships and levy armies, but it is impossible that a donation so magnificent shall not have the influence of its inspiration. The Secretary of War has just returned from a trip around the world, and has started Congress by a confidential document sent to the House of Representatives stating that this country is unfit for war, lacking the right kind of men, guns, ammunition and fortifications. This confidential report is said to be sensational in its details. In view of Mr. Carnegie's $10,000,000 donation to the cause of peace, this report from the Secretary of War is peculiarly clashing.

There is much lobbying in Congress by two provincial cities, New Orleans and San Francisco, to have Congress appropriate for an international Exposition in celebration of the completion of the Panama Canal. Both of these cities are, as it were, on the "jumping off" places of the country, one of the Gulf's edge and the other on the Pacific, both of them remote from centers of population; and while they claim that they do not want financial assistance, but only national recognition, everyone knows what that means in the beginning. The proper situation for a national exposition in celebration of so great an event, should be at the capital of the country. There is now no city in this hemisphere better adapted to an international exposition than Washington, D. C. The Potomac Park is practically within the center of the city, easily accessible to every part of it; and Washington is within five hours of New York, three hours of Philadelphia, forty five minutes from Baltimore, and within twenty-four hours of Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Louisville, Atlanta and all intermediate places.

Do your New Year resolving early.

At the hospital in Oswego on Sunday morning, occurred the death from typhoid fever of Peter Blonette, Jr., aged 33, a former well known resident of this city where he conducted a laundry. He had been in business with his brother in Oswego for the past three years. The funeral services were held from the late home and St. Louis's church this Wednesday morning.

Mrs. Mary M. Le Point, aged 52, died at the Lee Memorial hospital on Wednesday afternoon, having been removed from her home to that institution on Sunday. The funeral services were held on Sunday and burial was made in Mt. Adnah. The immediate survivors are the husband, five daughters, Mrs. Josephine Kelly, Mrs. Goldie Guernsey and the Misses Melinda, Elizabeth and Helen Le Point, and four sons, Ernest, Earl, Marshall and Elmer Le Point, all of this city.

The death of Mrs. Calvin Baldwin, aged 87, occurred on Wednesday at the home in Volney, after a short illness. The funeral services were held on Friday from the home of her daughter, Mrs. Hule, the Rev. Mr. Jones officiating. Burial was made in Mt. Adnah. The immediate survivors are three sons, Fred Baldwin of Oswego, Philo and Lester Baldwin of Niagara Falls, and four daughters, Mrs. Alice Althouse, Mrs. Helen Althouse and Mrs. Annette Gardner, all of Michigan, and Mrs. Josephine Hule of Volney. The deceased had been a life long resident of the town in which she died.

Sunday night at midnight, John H. Tibbitts, aged 91, passed to rest at the home of his son, Mr. C. C. Tibbitts, in this city, from a general breaking down incident to his great age. The deceased was born in Sandy Hill on August 7, 1820, but from the time he was ten years old until the past five years he had resided in Oswego where he followed the trade of cabinet maker for years, later becoming very well known throughout the section as clerk and bookkeeper for the late R. J. Oliphant company in Oswego. After the death of his wife, Mr. Tibbitts made his home with his son in this city. He had been an Odd Fellow in good standing for over 45 years, having united with Oswegatchie Lodge, I. O. O. F., in Oswego in June, 1845, and he was for years an active worker in the order having held many offices of trust and honor in the lodge, encampment and Canton. He was a member of the West Baptist church, Oswego, and enjoyed the confidence and esteem of all who knew him. Prayer will be said at the late home this Wednesday morning at twelve o'clock, the Rev. J. G. York being the officiating clergyman, and the body will be taken to Oswego, where it will be met by Oswego Odd Fellows, who will have charge of the services, which will be held from the Page mortuary chapel at Riverside cemetery, where the interment will take place. The survivors are three sons, Charles C. of this city; John M. of Oswego and William F. J. of New York city; also three grandsons, four granddaughters and six great grandchildren.

Government Without Law!

By Justice WESLEY O. HOWARD of the New York Supreme Court.

ALL THE POLITICAL EVILS WHICH BESET US THE GREATEST DANGER IS OUR DRIFT TOWARD GOVERNMENT WITHOUT LAW. IN FORM, THIS IS A GOVERNMENT BY THE PEOPLE; IN FACT, IT IS A GOVERNMENT BY THE BOSSES.

It would hardly seem credible to one who had not thought about it to be told that in the Empire State for more than a decade no law was enacted WITHOUT THE SANCTION OF THE BOSS, no law in opposition to his wish, and that his desires instantly, almost without murmur, became written in the statute books of the state. Yet such is the fact well known to all.

The highest places of appointment were filled absolutely by him. The boundaries of great cities he altered and their charters he fixed and changed. He MADE AND UNMADE GOVERNORS. He nominated judges at his pleasure and stripped off their gowns in his anger. He decreed that canals should be dug and roads should be built. He CAUSED HIMSELF TO BE APPOINTED AND REAPPOINTED TO A GREAT OFFICE until at last in his decrepitude the scepter of power was wrested from his hands not by the people, but by the TREACHERY OF HIS LIEUTENANTS.

Many public characters are fretted and ANNOYED BY THE CONSTITUTION AND ITS LIMITATIONS. They chafe to have their energies so circumscribed. They are indignant that the supreme court should continue to construe legislative enactments in conformity with the constitution. Such decisions do not, they think, come up to the needs of the times. If vested with dictatorial power they would abolish a tribunal so fossilized.

The age of statescraft seems to have perished and the age of the spectacular to have come. Instead of profound public papers which are to live in history, letters of repudiation frequently emanate. Instead of an effort to foster industries, a FRENZY TO SMASH BUSINESS IS THE RAGE.

NOISE IS SUBSTITUTED FOR REASON AND WORDS FOR ACTS.

"Don't Waste Your Time."

By JOHN H. FINLEY, President of the College of the City of New York.

YOU young men of seventeen or eighteen who are at work in the offices, stores and factories, you are the real millionaires of this country. YOU ARE MILLIONAIRES BECAUSE OF THE GREAT FORTUNE OF MINUTES YOU HAVE TO SPEND.

Of course you have to spend a large part of your fortune for food and shelter, but you still have many millions left, and what you do with your surplus will determine in many cases, at least, if not in all, the success or failure of your lives. Because you have not had the opportunity to enter college you must not feel that the battle of life will be against you. You have MORE TIME THAN MANY OF YOUR SO CALLED MORE FORTUNATE BROTHERS, and if you MAKE THE MOST OF THAT TIME you may be even more successful. You have millions of minutes. Don't waste them. Study in your spare time. You can overcome your handicap if you will make up your mind to do it.

THE BEST ADVICE I CAN GIVE TO YOUNG MEN IS THIS: DON'T WASTE YOUR TIME. FEW YOUNG MEN HAVE TO WORK MORE THAN EIGHT HOURS A DAY. SUPPOSE WE ALLOW EIGHT HOURS FOR SLEEP. THAT LEAVES EIGHT HOURS FOR EATING, GOING TO AND FROM WORK AND RECREATION. IF A YOUNG MAN IS REALLY AMBITIOUS HE CAN EMPLOY TWO OR THREE HOURS AT STUDY WITHOUT INCONVENIENCING HIMSELF TO ANY GREAT EXTENT.

He can attend night school. If he has progressed far enough he can take college courses at night. HE HAS THE TIME. It is simply his WILLINGNESS TO SACRIFICE A FEW HOURS OF PLEASURE.

Of course I don't want a young man to work all day and study all night. A certain amount of recreation and pleasure is a good thing—is necessary, in fact, to a healthy development. However, the average young man WASTES MORE TIME THAN IS NECESSARY.

If he will only devote part of the time that he has been wasting to STUDY there is no telling what he may accomplish.

All the World Will Soon Fly.

By ERIC THIEMANN, Director of the German Aeronautical Testing and Teaching Association.

IN twenty years all the world will be flying. At least a good part of the people in it will enjoy the pleasures of aerial navigation as they at present enjoy navigation on land in automobiles.

The air navigation problem is the greatest of the present time, and I expect to see it grow to tremendous proportions. In Germany and France we are progressing faster than anywhere, at least in the number of machines that are being flown. There is scarcely a day goes past that does not bring forth new aspirants in aeronautics.

The promoters of the scheme are not at all disheartened by some of their failures. They are proceeding with new dirigibles, and all of them will be in operation in a short time.

THE LARGE FARE FOR A TRIP FROM BERLIN TO DUSSELDORF OR FRANKFORT OR OTHER POINTS FROM TWO TO THREE HUNDRED MILES FROM BERLIN IS TWO HUNDRED MARKS, OR ABOUT FIFTY DOLLARS OF AMERICAN MONEY.

The entire German nation is enthusiastic over the new sport, and it is not hard to secure passengers for the trips.

Hannibal News: From all accounts the firemen's ball Friday night was a grand success in both a social and financial way. The old and young were present from far and near and it is said that one could hardly distinguish which was which or who was who, in the matter of age, so gracefully and happily did they try the fantastic too. The music furnished by Webb's orchestra, Fulton was of the best. One hundred and fifteen tickets were sold which netted the company about eighty five dollars. ## CAPTURE OF DR. MARY WALKER

A. J. Baker, of Paradise, Tex., who was first sergeant Company B, 10th Confederate Cavalry, writes of the capture of Dr. Mary Walker, of the Federal army, near Tunnel Hill, Ga., in the latter part of the winter of 1864 or early in 1865:

"The 10th Confederate Cavalry of General Hume's division, Allen's Brigade, was in winter quarters at Tunnel Hill, occupying some old infantry quarters of the previous winter. The regiment was doing picket duty on Taylor's Ridge, between the Confederate and Federal forces, which were stationed at the foot of the ridge on the east side, near the Nickajack Cave. We occupied a dangerous part of the line. A short time before they had made a raid on our post and killed one of the regiment. Their frequent raids on the pickets on that post had so incensed General Wheeler that he resolved to put a stop to them; so he had a picket force selected, and, with the aid of a guide to pilot him down the mountains on the east side, he took charge of the force in person and moved out to where they kept their main picket force, stationed under a large shelving rock on the side of the road near the top of the ridge. A short while before day he divided the force, taking with him the larger part, and, with the guide, followed a bridge path that led down the mountain, and thus came in between the main force and the force stationed at the shelving rock.

"Captain Knight, of the 16th, was left in charge of the men on the west side with orders to send out some men on the settlement roads that led by this post at the rock. In case they had sent out any scouts on our side, they would not return and come up in the rear. Captain Knight was to attack the force at the rock and to fire into them as they lay asleep. When the time agreed upon arrived, he moved cautiously along the road and came upon their sentinel, posted about fifty yards from the rock, and completely surprised him. They had evidently sent out scouts in the night. Side by side with Captain Knight I approached the guard. He halted us and asked, 'Who comes there?' Captain Knight replied: 'Friend with the countersign.' Upon being told to advance and give the countersign, Captain Knight walked up to him, and in pretending to give him the countersign poked his pistol to his head and told him he would blow out his brains if he gave the alarm. He surrendered, and we charged up to the rock and poured a deadly fire into the sleeping Yanks under the rock. Those we didn't kill or wound went at breakneck speed down the road, running into the trap set by General Wheeler, and he got nearly all who attempted to make their escape.

"A short while after this occurred Dr. Walker approached the lines near the point where the picket was killed early in the morning. O'Brien was on the vidette post. He was an Irish boy of Company B, 10th Confederate Cavalry, and was on the extreme post. Dr. Walker rode up near O'Brien, she had written a letter to a lady friend in Dalton and wished him to post it for her at Tunnel Hill. He gave her to understand that he would accommodate her, and she handed the letter to him. He took the letter and told her he would take her along with him to see that the letter was posted. 'O, indeed, not,' she said. 'Don't you see I am a Federal surgeon?' and called his attention to a green sash she wore. She had on a blue suit, blighter shirt, a military hat, one side of the brim turned up and pinned with a star. O'Brien took her to the lieutenant in charge of the picket force, who detailed a couple of men and sent her under guard to General Wheeler. He read her letter and communicated with General Johnston at Dalton. General Johnston rode up to Tunnel Hill, and after consultation with General Wheeler took her to Dalton. They passed through the camp of the 10th Regiment, and she recognized O'Brien, her captor, who was standing on the side of the road to see them pass, and spoke pleasantly to him. She was sent by General Johnson to Richmond, Va., and turned over to General Winder, who was in charge of Libby Prison, and, according to a Richmond paper, was confined there until the close of the war, or nearly so."

LETTER FROM MR. TAYLOR

Editor Times: I think many old timers will be pleased to read the following letter in the Times. Albert Taylor was captain of the Wide-Awakes in Fulton, and over four hundred of the club, including his son, Charles, took the trip to Syracuse and marched with thousands of others who favored Abraham Lincoln for President of the United States. His tribute to Richard Esmond causes my eyes to feel moist and with Comrade Roe I feel the mournful blow. Hoping you will have a healthful and happy 1911.

Yours truly,
Norm G. Cooper.
Oswego, N. Y.

My dear Cooper: I duly received your letter, postal card and newspaper clippings. The article on Dick Esmond is all right. Dick served for a time on the staff of Gen. Crawford at the time commanding a division in the 5th Corps. Dick was one of my bosom friends in our boyhood days. He had a fine reputation as a soldier. I can certify to his genial whole-souled, warm-hearted comradeship. He visited me often while the army was about Petersburg, Va. I am extremely sorry to learn that he has passed over. Peace to his ashes. I note what you say about Comrade Loud; all the comrades here are for him. Our Post has instructed its delegates to vote for Loud and I saw this a. m. a roasting circular issued by New York City Post endorsing Loud. It was by Gen. Stickles and other leading comrades.

Four clippings from the Journal concerning the great political meeting at that city during the strenuous campaign of 1860 carries me back to that historic period. I recall vividly that march through the streets of the "Salt City," where we were cheered and hoisted, applauded and derided, but on the whole we had a most enjoyable time. At least we thought so. There is little of that sort of thing now-a-days in our political campaigns. I recall going from Fulton to Hannibal—several wagon loads of "wide-awakes" to assist in a pole raising. When the pole was practically up the tackle broke and the pole fell and broke into three pieces. A bon fire was built in the vicinity to afford light to workmen engaged in splicing the pole. A second attempt to raise it met with a like result; and while the pole was being spliced the second time men drove to Granby, near the west end of the lower bridge Fulton, got one Amos Williams and his apparatus and brought them to Hannibal and at last just as day was breaking the pole was placed erect and secure. We drove home by day light.

Yours truly,
Chas. A. Taylor.

LOTTERY IN ITALY

Gambling Under the Auspices of the Government.

THE DRAWING IN PUBLIC.

An Eager, Excited, Turbulent Crowd Watches This Ceremony With Intense Interest—The Prizes and the Chances of the Players.

King Humbert I. made the rules for the public lottery of Italy.

First.—The public lottery is temporarily maintained by the favor of the state under the following laws.

Second.—It is administered by the minister of finance, under whom the chiefs are chosen for their respective functions.

Third.—The lotto is formed by ninety, numbered from 1 to 90, inclusive, five of which drawn by chance determine the successful.

Fourth.—One can "play the lotto" in the following manner:
On one number (very rarely played).
On all five numbers (very rarely played).

On two numbers—the "ambo."
On three numbers, which is known as the "quaterno."

On four numbers, which is known as the "quaterno."

Fifth.—When one number is played the winner is paid ten times and a half his output; when two numbers are played the winner is paid 350 times his output; when three numbers are played the winner is paid 5,250 times his output; when four numbers are played the winner is paid 50,000 times his output. Therefore if one has by any chance bought a No. 1 ticket and wins the four numbers (quaterno) he wins $50,000.

At 5 o'clock on every Saturday afternoon throughout all Italy the drawing of the lotto takes place. In Naples the ceremony is held at the end of a foot, filthy alley known as the Impresa, back in a great courtyard, in full view of the people on the balcony of an old palace. From early in the afternoon until the fatal hour the streets of Santa Chiara and the alley fill up with the crowd whose hope on this day is to be deceived. The streets are always so full of life that for this extra crowd, jostling, pushing and eager, there would seem to be no place. It is comprised of the very poor. The better classes watch for the telephone or the showing of the numbers in the various banks in the city to discover their fate. But in the Impresa the crowd of people is as dense as a shadow. There are many here who have paid their last cent for a ticket. There are many here who are in debt for the shoes they wear and will never be able to pay for them. But at the stroke of the church clock the blinds of the balcony open and the paraphernalia of the lotto are brought out—a long green table, on which is placed a crystal ball bound with silver, and an iron box containing ninety other little boxes, in which the ninety numbers are locked by the state. The officers of this performance are coolly indifferent, and the only figure deserving of note is that of the little orphan child, dressed in snowy white, chosen by law from the orphan asylum to draw up from the crystal ball the five magic numbers.

At the sight of these familiar, looked for objects the crowd begins to cry and chant, to beseech and evoke. It begs the little orphan child to draw well. And the child in his white robe, his innocent eyes on the mass of people, looks down on the beggars with their yellow locks and on the appealing mass. One by one the balls are taken out from their sealed boxes, displayed to the people and dropped into the big bowl.

They have blindfolded the little bambino, and he stands on a chair, for he is only eight years of age and is small. In full sight of the people. The balls having been shaken around for the last time, the child puts his hand to draw. The first number that he pulls out is called forth—"No. 5." Now, every Italian who has bought No. 5 for place has either won or lost. No one holds this number to this crowd, however, and there is a murmur—and a fresh adjuration for the child to draw well. The people who have drawn for the lotto and the quaterno still have their chance. The child draws again, this time No. 47, and the holders of the lotto are now the interested ones, for the next will be their last chance. The enthusiasm breaks forth again with murmurs and cries and prayers, and the quiet child before the urn in his white dress hears them and trembles, for he knows that he is menaced. Before the people there is a blackboard, and a man posts up the numbers as they are drawn—5, 47, 11, 10 and 80. And this series of five is discussed, yelled at, challenged, cursed, for not one in the crowd has drawn a fortunate number. The child's eyes are unbound, and he is put down and set free. The balls are returned into their boxes sealed-up and carried away under the eyes of the crowd, which after waiting for a moment, unable to believe its ill fortune, breaks up and disperses. Apathy is thrown upon the majority as much as such a state of mind is possible to a Neapolitan mass as they begin in groups to discuss the failure of their schemes and their combinations.—Marie Van Vorst in Harper's Magazine.

Elegies For Old Year.
"Of all sounds of all bells, most solemn and touching is the peal which clangs out the old year," wrote Charles Lamb. "I never hear it without a gathering up of my mind to a concentration of all the images that have diffused over the past twelvemonth, all I have done or suffered, performed or neglected, in that regretted time. I begin to know its worth as when a person dies."

Longfellow, too, looks at the solemn side of the old year, for he says in his "Minnikin Mass For the Lynx Year":
Through the woods and mountain passes
The winds like anthems roll.
They are chanting solemn songs,
Singing: "Pray, pray!"
Tennyson's "Death of the Old Year," however, looks more to the New Year and voices the sentiment of the "king is dead, long live the king." It is not well to dwell upon the mistakes of the past.

He was full of joke and jest,
But all his merry quips are dead.
To see him die across the waste
His son and heir doth ride posthaste.
But he'll be dead before
Every one has his own.
The night is stormy and cold, my friend,
And the New Year, bright and bold, my friend,
Comes up to take his own.

Canvas Currency.

Banknotes appear in much the same form throughout the world and have always done so except in China, where the earliest note was made of canvas, some six centuries before the Christian era. It was more like a tablecloth than a banknote, its length being about two meters, or six feet six inches. This form of note was not very convenient when large sums were concerned, so later the note was printed on parchment, and all other forms of money were suppressed. One emperor issued notes representing more than three thousand millions. But the money was never popular, and gradually the notes were retired.

A TURBULENT VOLCANO

Boiling Hot Pools of Taal, in Philippines.

The central or main crater of Taal is a conical mountain. Its diameter on an air level north and south is 6,233 feet and its west diameter 7,546 feet. The rim of this crater is somewhat irregular, but is nowhere broken through. Its highest point standing at only 1,050 feet above sea level and its lowest at 426 feet.

Within the rim are two hot pools, known respectively as the yellow and the green lake, and a little active cone above fifty feet in height from which escape steam and sulphurous gas in varying quantities.

In the smaller lake every few minutes the water in the center is blown up like an immense bubble, which, rising above the surface, finally bursts, revealing a black orifice and causing the boiling and very turbulent water to assume all imaginable colors. The aqueous vapor escaping is sufficient to form a broad, smoky column which is visible especially during the night and at the early morning.

At some distance and before reaching the edge of the crater, where a few of the bottom can be obtained, the rumbling sound produced by the escaping vapor, under the influence of the mysterious subterranean forces, can be heard like that of an immense rolling kettle.

The greatest eruption of Taal took place in 1754. The eruption began on day 13 and did not end till Dec. 1. During this dreadful time the intensity and aspect of the eruption were continually changing, and the four principal towns of the lagoon of Bombon disappeared—viz, Sala, Lupa, Tanauan and Taal, with the numerous villages around them.—Manila Times.

JARRED THE BANK.

Sensational Play That Have Been Pulled Off at Monte Carlo.

The big players have never succeeded in carrying away very much money from Monte Carlo. In 1905 a London newspaper published a story to the effect that an American from Chicago had won 500,000 francs there in one day and had taken the money home with him, but his name was not given. In the early nineties the sensation at Monte Carlo one season was the play of a Chicago youth of twenty-one, named Harry Rosenfeld, who made something like 500,000 francs in a week, playing during the day, but lost most of it at baccarat at night after the casino had closed.

The late David Christie Murray used to tell a story of a sensational play at Monte Carlo that he witnessed himself. "It was my fortune," he said, "to be in the casino on a Sunday night in 1899 when a French nobleman bearing a historic name entered the room with a fancy to play on No. 8. He was followed by a valet who was marked 'pugilist' from head to heel and carried a cash box which proved to be full of 1,000 franc notes. 'Numero huit,' said M. le Duc, et marium par tout." He was known, and his challenge was accepted before the cash box was opened. No. 8 turned up three times running. M. le Duc nerved three times seventeen times 6,000 francs in about three minutes, and the bank was closed. What brought his historic dukedom there in the nick of time for that trifling piece of luck nobody can tell. He did not want the money, for he had just married a few odd millions, and he did not seem to care whether he lost or won, but stood impassive as a red Indian through the few minutes of that stupendous game. It was within a quarter of an hour of closing time, and there were not many people present, but the sale went mad."

The two biggest winners at Monte Carlo of recent years to figure prominently in the newspapers are Charles Wells, a Londoner, who won 750,000 francs in a few weeks and lost it back and considerable more, and a Yorkshire mechanic named Jagers, who won 3,000,000 francs on a system and was rapidly losing it back by the same system when he had sense enough to quit the game. He got away with considerably more than 1,000,000 francs.—Frank Marshall White in Harper's Weekly.

Their Last Hope Gone.

When the minister praised the rapidity of Mrs. Green's bountiful birthday night supper he could not tell the reason why. He was, however, gazed at him so reproachfully, "You like raspberry jam, my little man?" he asked Horatio.

"Yes, sir, I do, and Angle does," said the minister in distinctly resentful tones.

"Mother told us that she was the last she made wasn't quite the mark and if you didn't praise it and I could have it for lunch on your bread, for Mrs. Willis and Mr. Bedd never said a word when they ate it, and you've made the third. But she'll use it for the church school," and Horatio looked gloomily at his twin, who returned the look in his Youth's Companion.

Catharine Parr.

Catharine Parr, the sixth wife of the married Henry VIII., owed more to her intellect than to her person. She was not good looking, but had a pleasant face and a world of tact. So skillfully did she manage her troublesome husband as actually turn him against some of the most powerful of his own officials. Once an order was made out for her arrest on charge of heresy, but she got news of the matter and so cleverly flattered and soothed Henry as to effect complete reconciliation, and when the officers came to serve the order he drove them out with curses and threats.

Enchanted.

It takes a neighbor to disentangle a man from a handsome setting. A good many years ago, when Wordsworth was poet laureate of England, a worthy Cumberland yeoman walked many miles, in response to widely scattered notices, to hear the poet laureate address a meeting. When he discovered who held the high sounding title he left the hall in indignation.

"'Twas noble old Wadsworth of Rydal, after all," he said scornfully on his return to his family.

"And the third was so difficult to understand and acted so different from the others she called him a paradox."—Chicago News.

Washington's Tips and Compliments to Patty and Polly.

Those who take tipping in the somewhat solemn spirit of the social investigator may find their minds enlightened by the perusal of an excerpt from the writings of our first president, which shows what a graceful turn appreciation and courtesy may give to the custom.

In 1789, on his return from his New England progress, Washington lodged at Taft's inn, at Cambridge, Mass., where the domestic service—as at many inns in the country—was performed by the landlord's daughters. Somewhat later Washington wrote to Mr. Taft:

Hartford, 8 November, 1783.

Sir—Being informed that you have given my name to one of your sons and called another after Mrs. Washington's family, and being, moreover, very much pleased with the modest and innocent looks of your two daughters, Patty and Polly, I do for these reasons send each of these girls a piece of chinix and to Patty, who bears the name of Mrs. Washington and who waited upon us more than Polly did, I send 5 guineas, with which she may buy herself any little ornaments she may want, or she may dispose of them in any other manner more agreeable to herself.

As I do not give these things with a view to have a talked of or even to its being known, the less there is said about it the better you will please me, but that I may be sure the chinix and money have got safe to hand let Patty, who I dare say is as honest as I am, write me a line informing me thereof, directed to "The President of the United States at New York." I wish you and your family well and am your humble servant, "GO. WASHINGTON."

FOR THAT DULL FEELING

AFTER EATING

I have used Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets for some time, and can testify that they have done me more good than any tablets I have ever used. My trouble was a heavy dull feeling after eating. —David Freeman, Kempt, Nova Scotia.

These tablets strengthen the stomach and improve the digestion. They also regulate the liver and bowels. They are far superior to pills but cost no more. Get a free sample at any drug store and see what a splendid medicine it is.

Pastor's Revenge.

In Valley-Radot's "Life of Pasteur" we read the story of his misery. It is nothing to say that the war nearly broke his heart. But it broke neither his faith nor the straight line of his work. Only a sort of rage possessed him to redeem and console France by working for her. "Henceforth," he said, "every one of my books shall have written on it these words, 'Revenge, revenge, revenge.' And this was his revenge, to set the name of France in the honors list of science higher than ever, to give the rest of his life to her service and to wear himself out for her sake.

Carving.

A Handsome Woman

Every woman may not be handsome, but every woman should keep with care the good points nature has given her. No woman need have sallow skin, dull eye, blotchy complexion, who pays proper attention to her health.

Where constipation, liver derangement, blood impurities and other irregularities exist, good complexion, bright eyes and sprightly movements cannot exist. Internal derangements reveal themselves, sooner or later on the surface. Headache, dark rings around the eyes, sallow skin, a constant tired feeling—mean that the liver and digestive organs are needing help and correction. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets give this necessary help. They work in nature's own way. They do not merely flush the bowels, but they set the liver and stomach to their proper functions. So said and so proved, they are the only remedy that can be relied upon to produce all-around health, constipation and diarrhea. Sold everywhere. Price 25 cents.

TIDES THAT RAGE

Queer Pranks Played by the Ebb and Flow of the Ocean.

THE RUSH INTO THE AMAZON.

Three Successive Waves, Each Ten Feet High, Flung Themselves in a Raging Mass Upon the Great River. The Tides at Panama.

The highest ocean tide in the world is in the bay of Fundy, where it has been known to rise eighty odd feet. The second highest tide is found at the mouth of the English river the Severn.

The top of the Severn tide is at Chepstow, and when there is a gale behind a spring tide a rise of nineteen feet seven inches has been observed within a single hour. The result of this is a "bore," a tidal wave which sweeps up the wide channel at more than ten miles an hour and swallows the bare sands under a wild tumble of turbulent waves.

The cause of the gigantic Severn tide is interesting. It is not entirely due to the rapid narrowing and shallowing of the Bristol channel, but is chiefly caused by the fact that two tides enter the Severn simultaneously. The great of the tide which runs into the Irish channel meets at the mouth of the Bristol channel another wave, twelve hours older, which has come round the north of Ireland. These two together run up the Severn.

A tide almost equal to that of the Severn is seen in the bay of Mount St. Michael, on the French coast. At low tide cars drive across from La Vendee to the Isle of Noirmoutier; at high tide big ships sail across the road.

In stories of adventure one sometimes reads of the tide rushing in over the sands faster than a man can run. This actually happens in the bay of Mount St. Michael.

At low tide there lies before one a wide plain of sand 150 square miles in extent, in the center of which rises the huge black mass of St. Michael's mount. The tide turns, and one sees it rushing in edged by a line of white. A liquid mass estimated at 1,470,000,000,000 of cubic yards comes pouring into the bay and in a very few hours covers the whole great plain. The distance between ebb and flood marks in the bay is nearly seven miles.

Centuries ago all this desolate gulf was a wide stretch of fertile land, protected on the seaward side by tall sand hills. A great tide with a heavy gale behind it burst through the barriers and stole 90,000 acres of farm and pasture.

While the French side of the English channel is daily visited by immense tides, England's side has comparatively small ones, and from Poole harbor to the Isle of Wight the very peculiar phenomenon of double tides is seen. These are caused by the interruption of the tidal wave by the Isle of Wight.

All over the world we find the tides playing the queerest pranks. At the port of Panama, on the Pacific end of the Panama canal, you may watch a tide of twenty-three feet rise and fall. Less than forty miles away, at the Atlantic end of the big cut, there is practically no tide at all.

We have spoken of the "bore" in the Severn. Imposing sight as this is, it is child's play compared with the tidal wave which rushes up the enormous estuary of the Amazon.

This rush of water, which, by the way, makes a terrific roaring sound, comes in three successive waves, each about ten feet high, and vessels navigating the estuary are in as great danger as when they are overtaken by storm in the open sea.

The Ganges has a dangerous "bore" at high springs, and the "mascaret" on the river Seine is also a source of peril to small craft.

The force of the currents or races produced by tides penned in narrow channels must be seen to be believed. Every one has heard of the famous maelstrom off the Norwegian coast, the terrible whirlpool which was supposed to drag down ships and grind them to pieces against the rocks at the bottom. The whirlpool as such does not exist, but the tide race between Moskol island and its next neighbor is almost as dangerous as the revolving eddy of the table.

The sea here rushes through a rock walled channel at more than ten miles an hour. A sailing vessel caught in this race is perfectly helpless, and a steamer must have uncommonly good engines to drive her way through it.

Between Java and Scarba islands, on the west coast of Scotland, is a tidal race which for speed and fury holds a world's record. The native name for this race is Colbreheacan, literally "caldron of the spotted seas." Here the tide runs at no less than twelve and a half miles an hour, and when the wind is over the tide the whole strait becomes actually a boiling, foaming cauldron, into which no craft of any kind could venture without certain disaster.

In December, 1902, an easterly gale created enormous difficulties for the shipping at Hamburg. It took the water right out of the Elbe, and where vessels drawing twenty-five feet had been accustomed to move easily there was not water enough to float those drawing fifteen feet. All the large steamers in the port were stranded, and some lay right over on their sides. The scene was a most curious and amazing one.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A LESSON FOR HIS WIFE.

The Husband Found That He, Too, Had Something to Learn.

All Paris is laughing at an adventure on the French frontier line which occurred the other day to a young dramatic author well known in Paris.

He is newly married, and part of the honeymoon was spent in Belgium. While there the bride was very anxious to buy lace, which is much cheaper in Belgium than it is in France. But the bridegroom objected to smuggling the lace through and told his wife at Peignies the customs examination was very severe. She laughed at him, and in the train she said, "I am quite sure that I could easily have smuggled any amount of lace under my dress."

To prove himself right and teach his wife caution for the future the bridegroom whispered to one of the custom house officers at Peignies and, pointing to his wife, who was not looking, said, "I think that lady has some lace."

The officer made a sign, and madame, protesting angrily, was taken off and searched, while the author smoked a cigarette and chuckled at the thought that the search—although he thought she had no lace—would cure her of the wish to smuggle in the future. He ceased chuckling, though, when the custom house officer came up to him and said:

"We are very much obliged to you. The lady had $200 worth of lace around her waist. But she says you will pay the fine."—Cor. Wichita Eagle.

Incapacitated.

"The fussy individual who always has a run in with the waiter never fares any better than the rest of us who are satisfied to take things as they come," said the homeless bachelor. "I took breakfast with one of these fussers the other morning in a little cafe uptown that was new to both of us.

"All he wanted was a cup of coffee and a couple of boiled eggs. But you might have thought the universe depended upon those eggs. After having given the waiter minute instructions as to their preparation, he sat with his watch in his hands.

"Finally the eggs came, and there was a lot more powwow. As he cracked the shell of one he turned to the waiter and said, 'Are you sure these eggs are positively fresh?'

"And the waiter, who had watery eyes and a very red nose, replied with all seriousness: 'I really can't say, sir. I have a frightful cold in my head.'"

LORD AND LADY DUDLEY.

Lieutenant-Governor of Australia to Be Sued For Divorce.

One of the significant features of the late election was the vote in Illinois on the initiative referendum. A little ballot intended merely as an advisory vote was submitted, containing an opportunity to express the views of the voters upon a number of items. The total vote of the State was about 700,000 and of these 443,505 voted for the initiative and referendum, and 127,751 against them. The majority is overwhelming.

To be really optimistic at this season of the year, just forget that there are such things as January bills.

A MEMORABLE WATCH MEETING

NEW YEAR'S EVE came right in the middle of a series of "protracted meetings" which had been started in a little church in the northern part of Indiana some twenty-five years ago. The faithful few had been gathered night after night for a month, and not more than a dozen persons had knelt at the mourners' bench, including the chronic backsliders. When the opening hymn was announced all the seats had been taken, and a dense crowd of boys and young men occupied the space between the door and the last row of seats.

As the hours slipped by and the end of the old year approached the service changed into a season of prayer and testimony. The little clock which hung on the wall behind the pulpit finally pointed to 11 o'clock, and the preacher arose to make one last supreme effort to regain some soul from eternal torment. At his direction the most zealous members of the congregation left their seats and mingled with the audience, looking for a chance convert.

It was at this critical moment that an untimely interruption disturbed the passing of the old year and marred the peacefulness of the meeting. Deacons Wiley and Mills had been so bold as to approach the godless crowd around the door and suggest that there was too much laughing and talking. They had even dared to tell two or three of the leading spirits that a failure to preserve order meant ejection from the church. The sound of loud talking suddenly reached the ears of the worshippers, and all heads turned toward the door. Loud curses and angry words, uplifted fists and stamping feet told that a fierce struggle was taking place. Out of the tangled mass presently came Deacons Wiley and Mills, each in triumphant possession of a paunch, disheveled, fighting prisoners. The culprits were the sons of their captors, and against all their kicking and squirming they were forced slowly along the aisles on each side of the church to the mourners' bench, fighting every inch of the way.

"Get down on your knees, darn you!" commanded Deacon Wiley, seizing his son by the shoulders and dragging him indignation to gain the ministry. "Get down on your knees or I'll skin you alive when I get you home!"

"Keep your seats, brethren and sisters," exclaimed Rev. Ebenezer Barker. "This young man is sorry for what he has done, and we may yet save him from the wrath to come."

There was a suppressed stir from those who took the preacher literally. Sam Wiley, the wildest scamp that ever robbed a watermelon patch, looked at his father's stern, unyielding face and felt the grip tighten on his shoulders. He cast a furtive glance toward the women's corner and saw his mother's eyes filled with tears. He turned to his right and saw his companion in mischief, "Diddy" Mills, crying like a baby, just for a moment he stiffened with pride, and then he felt his father's strong arms forcing him down on his knees. At the same time "Diddy" Mills went down under the pressure on his shoulders.

"Who will be the next to come forward?" shouted Rev. Ebenezer Barker, dancing back and forth before the pulpit with a joy he could not conceal. "The Lord bless these young men who have seen the error of their ways. Let us all unite in prayer."

Everybody prayed. Deacon Wiley leading the low, murmuring chorus with a fervent entreaty to his son, to forego the wickedness of the world and unite with the church. When Deacon Wiley ceased Deacon Mills began to pray aloud for his wayward boy. It was very funny to the crowd around the door, but after awhile something seemed to choke their laughter. Sister Mills' high pitched and quivering voice arose in prayer, and there was a pathos in her appeal that started tears into the eyes of the rowdiest rowdy in the crowd. Sister Wiley, unable to restrain her emotions, joined her cries with those of Sister Mills. Suddenly a wave of increased excitement swept through the congregation. Two of the toughest young men of the town walked slowly down the aisles and knelt at the low railing. They were hardly down when two more came forward.

Such a revival was never known before in the history of the church as the one which started with the watch meeting that night. Rev. Ebenezer Barker said to himself that it was due to his powers as an exhorter. Two mothers believed in their hearts that the efficacy of prayer had been demonstrated in a wonderful manner. But suppose those muscular fathers and remained inactive. Would the protracted meeting have lasted another week?

A NEW YEAR'S DREAM.

IN the cozy depths of an armchair thrown On New Year's eve, I mused alone. "Welladay!" thought I. "And deary me!"

This world is a fairly good world. I own. But how much better indeed 'twould be if putting aside his natural pride. Each living thing in the world so wide Would honestly try his simple best To be obliging to all the rest!

With little more kindness and sweet civility, Courtesy, patience and amiability— Ah, welladay, and deary me. What a highly agreeable world 'twould be!"

Then softly faded the freighted's dream, And I fell asleep— or so it would seem— And dreamed this very remarkable dream:

I stood, methought, in the same old world, With the same old ocean round it curled, But a singular state of things I found. As I rubbed my eyes and looked around. Each man and woman, each chick and child, Wherever I met them, bowed and smiled. And answered my questions before they were asked. And with my errands their memories tasked.

And each, I saw, with an equal zest, Was doing the same for all the rest. Such consideration and thoughtful seal, Such delicate tact, I could but feel. From the president, bland on his lofty seat, To the dear little crickets that chirped at my feet.

There was not a thing in that land so fair But lived to oblige. With the tenderest care. The ragman muffled his bells for fear They might awaken some sleeper near. And the newsboys called the Times and Post.

In tones like a cooling dove's—almost The plumber offered the pipes to mend. "Just as a favor, to please a friend." The lawyer begged that his little bill, Unpaid, as it happened, be unpaid still. And the worthy person, considerate man, Finished his sermon before he began.

The cook made tarts each day in the year. And nobody thought it the least bit queer. EACH DAY IN THE YEAR. The kind police—men in all the parks. Just stayed to see that the boys—such larks!—Kept on the grass, and the teachers bright. Have only—as children know is right—The shortest lessons and highest marks. The printers sent out in the kindest way A new children's magazine every day. And the editors always took the rhymes That the poets sent at all possible times.

To please the fisherman down by the brook The fish came swimming to catch the hook. The oysters willingly opened their shells. The buckles sprang merrily up in the wells. And the little dogs gathered the downy bread. And helped the chickens to scratch for food.

The currants and blackberries picked themselves. And stood all canned on the pantry shelves. The sun sat willingly up all night. To cheer the earth when it needed light. The babies their natural cries suppressed. For fear of waking their parents' rest.

And the dear little, kind little, sweet little boys. Refrained from making the slightest noise. But quietly played with their harmless toys. And washed their hands without being told. To please their mothers as good as gold.

The breeze came blowing in gentle ways. When ever 'twas wanted to fill the sails. The prisoners sang, WASHED THEIR HANDS. And in the un-without-being-told, locked jail.

And the mice sat up on the balcony rails. To let the kittens play with their tails. And the old cats stifled their nightly wails. And the little fish danced to tickle the whales. And the brown hawk hurried to warn the quails. And the butterflies loitered to help the snails.

And the farmers were gentle and kind to the nolls. And the mops took care not to scratch the palls. And— Here the wonderful story falls. For I, breathless, woke. It was New Year's day.

The world wagged on in the same old way. "It was only a dream!" said I. "Dear me! But I'll be as obliging as can be. And the world may be better for that—well see!" —Margaret Johnson in St. Nicholas.

The New Year. Who comes dancing over the snow. His little soft feet all bare and rosy? Open the door, though the wild winds blow. Take the child in and make him cozy. Take him in and hold him dear. He is the wonderful New Year. Open your heart, be it said or gay. Welcome him there, and use him kindly. For you must cherish him, you see. Carry him with you, and let him stay. Whether he brings you joy or fear. Take him in, God sends him, this good New Year. —Lillian Maria Mulock Crafts

EVERY now and then we hear of some prominent medical authority condemning athletics in general. He will attempt to show how the American youth is gradually UNDERMINING HIS HEALTH and will endeavor to trace the early fatalities of heart failure and tuberculosis victims to the strenuous competition in the various forms of athletics. And his long talk generally convinces quite a few persons to his way of thinking. But if this authority would take the right fellow as an example he would CHANGE HIS IDEAS.

EVERY YOUNG MAN SHOULD TAKE UP SOME FORM OF ATHLETICS. FIRST OF ALL, UNDERGO A THOROUGH PHYSICAL EXAMINATION AND IF PRONOUNCED FIT GET MIXED UP IN SOME ONE OF THE VARIOUS SPORTS. TRY THEM ALL. THEN SELECT THE ONE BEST FITTED FOR YOUR PHYSICAL MAKEUP, BUT DO NOT GO IN FOR THE HARD COMPETITIONS UNTIL YOU FEEL YOU CAN STAND THE STRAIN.

LIVE CLEAN AND GET PLENTY OF SLEEP. Smoke, if you must, in moderation, but cut it out entirely if possible. Keep on the water wagon altogether, with the exception of a little ale or stout occasionally, and do not hit the high places. TAKE GOOD CARE OF THE STOMACH.

Unless a healthy young fellow can use up some of his surplus energies in athletics and GET ACQUAINTED WITH THE LIFE OF THE ATHLETE he may possibly get mixed up with a lot of uncongenial companions. As athletics takes up most of a person's spare time, he generally avoids all this.

IF NOT OVERDONE AND THE YOUNG MAN IS PHYSICALLY FIT, ATHLETICS IS THE GREATEST DEVELOPER FOR THE GROWING YOUTH AND SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED AND NOT DISCOURAGED.

Conservation of Common Sense Is Really What the Country Needs

Business Men's Lack of Confidence Is Foolish.

By JAMES J. HILL

IT is only a senseless LACK OF CONFIDENCE that causes the present fear of business men of the United States to engage in new enterprises. Some one somewhere has grown timid some time over something and has CRIED "BOO!" at his neighbor. His neighbor probably jumped, and the next fellow took fright WITHOUT KNOWING WHY HE WAS FRIGHTENED.

THE RECENT CONSERVATION CONGRESS HELD IN ST. PAUL TALKED ABOUT CONSERVING WATER AND CONSERVING LAND, CONSERVING COAL AND CONSERVING IRON. IT'S TOO BAD SOME ONE DIDN'T SAY A WORD ABOUT CONSERVING COMMON SENSE.

That's what this country needs right now—to CONSERVE COMMON SENSE. An article in a September magazine deals with the "conservation of common sense" and gives as the panacea for the paralysis that prevails the use of old fashioned COMMON SENSE. Business men everywhere should take that advice.

I can see no reason for the fears which seem to possess our business men. I have preached a "return to the farm" policy for years, and I expect to continue to do so. But that is NO REASON FOR FEARS ON THE PART OF BUSINESS.

Women Must Do Their Share.

By JULIA WARD HOWE, Author, Who is Over Ninety-one Years Old.

THE well being of society cannot be attained without the CO-OPERATION OF WOMEN who have it at heart. Some women find their chief delight in the study of public business, but far too many are INDIFFERENT. Can we acquiesce in this indifference?

NO, WE CANNOT. WOMEN MUST MARCH WITH THE ARMY THAT GOES EVER ON AND DISCOVER NEW OPPORTUNITIES. SOCIETY NEEDS TO EXERT ALL THE POWER IT POSSESSES TO ATTAIN THE HIGHEST RESULTS. WE CANNOT ALLOW OUR EFFORTS TO BE WASTED.

I remember once being aroused from a deep slumber in which I had a vision. I seemed to see in a rather confused way a number of men and women working at desks and tables, all working hard and being evidently in a hurry.

A voice said to me: "Look at these men and women. They are WORKING FOR THE GOOD OF HUMANITY. They are working like ants, like bees—yes, they are working like engines for the WELFARE OF THE HUMAN RACE. Have a good look at them and don't let it pass out of your memory. The word is victory."
